1.0 Preface

This project was begun to satisfy my curiosity about the New Testament authors' reliance on the Septuagint and to provide a framework to address the question of the appropriate source text for Old Testament translations into English. For those who are new to the Septuagint, I have provided an "Introduction," discussing the history of that translation. "The Septuagint in the Early Church" addresses how the Church in the West departed from reliance on the Septuagint under the influence of Jerome, though earlier writers had generally read the Septuagint and defended its use.

I investigated the New Testament authors' dependence on the Septuagint largely by comparing New Testament quotations of the Old with both the Septuagint and an English translation of the Masoretic (Hebrew) text. "The Septuagint in the New Testament" summarizes the methodology I employed in assessing those comparisons and the results I discovered. A large number of quotations agree in sense with the Septuagint, but disagree with the Masoretic text - I compiled a list of these verses, and a list of the occasions (far smaller in number) where the New Testament author used a Masoretic reading rather than one from the Septuagint.

Appendix B, "The Table of Quotations in New Testament Order," includes a set of symbols to indicate the extent of agreement (in terms both of meaning and of word choice) between quotations and sources. Each quotation is shown in Appendix C, "Detailed Comparisons," which displays the Greek of the New Testament, the Greek of the Septuagint, and English translations of the New Testament, the Septuagint, and the Masoretic text. Appendix C lists the quotations in New Testament order for ease of use with Appendix B. In Appendix D, the reader will find a sample of readings from the Dead Sea Scrolls which support the Septuagint against the Masoretic text. Appendix E consists of a table showing the books of the Septuagint as they appear in Rahlfs and in the three great uncial manuscripts. Appendix F is a collection of possible New Testament references to the books of the Septuagint outside the Hebrew canon (the "Septuagint Plus").¹

Please note: I am not an expert in either Greek or Hebrew. A physicist by education, I have no formal training in religion, theology or scripture studies. I urge readers to treat the results presented here with caution. Should anyone find errors - particularly in my categorization of the quotations as either in or out of agreement with the Masoretic text - I will gladly accept informed correction. The reader who (perhaps with wisdom) doubts the validity of my characterizations of the degree of agreement in meaning between quotations and source texts may wish to rely on the judgment of the Greek New Testament (4th edition), which is also presented in the "Table of Quotations in New Testament Order."

¹ These Notes originally appeared in over three hundred separate HTML files located at http://www.geocities.com/r_grant_jones/Rick/Septuagint/spindex.htm . Two appendices from the HTML version were not included here: a collection of discrepancies in the book of Genesis between the Septuagint and the Masoretic text, and table that illustrates an approach for the use of patristic scriptural interpretations in the translation of the Septuagint. The first was excluded because its key message, that the Septuagint and the Masoretic texts vary frequently and in ways that are sometimes significant, is made by Appendix D. The second is incomplete.

2.0 Introduction

The Septuagint is the most ancient translation of the Old Testament into Greek. The translators were likely Jews of the dispersion, living in Alexandria, Egypt.

The beginning of the Jewish presence in Egypt is difficult to date precisely. There may have been a Jewish colony there as early as the tenth century BC, when Shishak (Shashanq) invaded Palestine and took treasures from the temple and the king's palace (2 Chronicles 12.1-8). But certainly a number of Jews lived in Egypt after the murder of Gedaliah (~586 BC), when "the captains of the forces set out and went to Egypt; for they were afraid of the Chaldeans" (2 Kings 25-26). Jeremiah, Baruch, and the princesses also went into Egypt at that time, though Jeremiah prophesied that they would all "perish by the sword and by famine, until not one is left" (Jeremiah 43.6, 44.27). One expects, on the basis of that prophecy, that this was not the beginning of a permanent settlement. A lasting Jewish presence in Egypt can, however, be definitely dated from the the time of the founding of the city of Alexandria in 332 BC, when Alexander the Great granted them citizenship.

In time, the Jews in Alexandria lost familiarity with Hebrew, and spoke Greek instead. It was natural, then, that they would require a translation of the scriptures into Greek for public worship in the synagogues and for private study. An account of the translation of the Septuagint is told in The Letter of Aristeas, which claims that Demetrius Phalereus, who ran the royal library in Alexandria, urged the king (Philadelphus (285-247 BC)) to obtain a copy of the Jewish law for the library. Philadelphus sent a deputation to the high priest Eleazar in Jerusalem, and the result was that seventy-two elders arrived in Egypt with a copy of the Hebrew law written on rolls of skins in golden letters. They were given accommodations on the island of Pharos, and completed their translation in seventy-two days. The same basic account is given in Aristobulus, Philo, and Josephus.

Even if the account given in the Letter of Aristeas is inaccurate, it seems clear that the Hebrew Old Testament was available in Greek in Alexandria before the birth of Christ. As Christianity began to spread, the Septuagint was used with persuasive effect by Christian apologists - so well, in fact, that in time the Jews of the dispersion replaced it with newer works. For instance, a proselyte to Judaism named Aquila completed a extremely literal translation of the Old Testament into Greek about the year 128. Other translations were made by Theodotion of Ephesus and a certain Symmachus, called an Ebionite, also in the second century.

The most ancient manuscripts of the complete (or nearly complete) Septuagint are known as Vaticanus, Sinaiticus, and Alexandrinus. Vaticanus and Sinaiticus have been dated to the mid-fourth century, and Alexandrinus to the fifth.

Based on an earlier Hebrew original, the Septuagint departs from the Masoretic text² frequently. "The book of Jeremiah is noteworthy," for instance, "in that the present Hebrew text differs substantially from the Greek version (the Septuagint) in both content and order. Thus the Septuagint omits several passages (e.g., 33.14-26) and combines the oracles against foreign nations into a single section following 25.14, though in a different order. In addition, there are many smaller differences from verse to verse. Remarkably, among the portions of the text of Jeremiah in Hebrew that are found among the Dead Sea Scrolls are not only those that reflect the standard Hebrew text but also those that reflect the text tradition represented by the Septuagint. It is likely, then, that these two text traditions represent the contrasting editorial work on the book of Jeremiah that took place in Egypt (the Septuagint tradition) and in Palestine or Babylon (the traditional Hebrew text).” [Introduction to the book of Jeremiah, The New Oxford Annotated Bible, page 960.] Around the end of the first century, the Hebrew text was standardized to a form nearly identical with the modern Masoretic text. Variant readings, such as those represented in the Septuagint, were no longer transmitted in the Hebrew language.

Another contrast between the Septuagint and the modern Hebrew Old Testament involves the canon of scripture. The Septuagint includes several books and sections of books absent from the modern Hebrew text: 1 Esdras; Tobit; Judith; 1-3 Maccabees; the Wisdom of Solomon; the Wisdom of Sirach (Ecclesiasticus); Baruch; the Epistle of Jeremiah; The Song of the Three Children; Daniel and Susanna; Daniel, Bel and the Dragon; Additions to the Book of Esther; Psalm 151; and the Prayer of Manasseh. The difference in content has been explained in various ways. Perhaps the most straightforward account is that the Jews of Alexandria had a relatively broad canon, which was generally adopted by the Christians as they employed the Septuagint as their Old Testament. The Jews of Palestine, when they established their canon around the turn of the first century at the council of Jamnia, may have been reiterating the position that had been more or less settled in Palestine for some time - though some books just made (Esther, Ecclesiastes, the Song of Solomon, and Ezekiel, for instance) or missed (Sirach) the cut. The conflict with Christians may have served as a catalyst to push the Jews of the dispersion into the Palestinian camp. This article - concerned with the text of the books within the Hebrew canon - will not address the controversy surrounding the Old Testament canon in any depth.

From the time of Jerome (early fifth century), Old Testament translations to the vernacular in the West have used the Hebrew as the primary source - the Septuagint has been relegated to a secondary role. (Incidentally, some are under the mistaken impression - given by misleading language in the preface to the 1899 edition - that the Douay Old Testament was translated from a Latin text based on the Septuagint. Unfortunately, Jerome’s Vulgate - apart from the Psalms and the books then available only in Greek - by and large follows the Hebrew text.) It is hoped that the reader will reconsider the wisdom of this course of action, given the clear New Testament reliance on Septuagint readings. Fortunately, new English translations of the Septuagint are being prepared for publication in the near future.

What follows comprises two main sections. The first deals with the early Church’s use of the Septuagint - particularly their sense that the Hebrew text was unreliable. It begins with the discussion between Jerome and Augustine regarding the former’s decision to craft his Latin translation from the available Hebrew text, rather than from the Septuagint. It is from Jerome’s fateful choice that the West derives its tradition of favoring the Hebrew to the Greek. The second section, “The Septuagint in the New Testament,” assesses the extent to which the New Testament authors depended on the Septuagint instead of the Hebrew text.

3.0 The Septuagint in Early Christian Writings

A fundamental change in the way the Church viewed the Old Testament was engineered by St. Jerome, early in the fifth century. Until that time, the Church had relied on the Septuagint in the East and on a Latin translation of the Septuagint in the West. When Jerome set about to make a new translation into Latin, he determined to revert to Hebrew for his source text.

The Church being an essentially conservative institution, his decision to follow such a novel course was criticized. It is interesting to read his response to that criticism, for he explains his decision on the basis of apostolic precedent - that is, that the New Testament authors made reference to the Hebrew Old Testament rather than to the Septuagint on several occasions:

I have received letters so long and eagerly desired from my dear Desiderius ... entreating me to put our friends in possession of a translation of the Pentateuch from Hebrew into Latin. The work is certainly hazardous and it is exposed to the attacks of my calumniators, who maintain that it is through contempt of the Seventy that I have set to work to forge a new version to take the place of the old. They thus test ability as they do wine; whereas I have again and again declared that I dutifully offer, in the Tabernacle of God what I can, and have pointed out that the great gifts which one man brings are not marred by the inferior gifts of another. But I was stimulated to undertake the task by the zeal of Origen, who blended with the old edition Theodotion's translation and used throughout the work as distinguishing marks the asterisk and the obelus, that is the star and the spit, the first of which makes what had previously been defective to beam with light, while the other transfixes and slaughters all that was superfluous.

But I was encouraged above all by the authoritative publications of the Evangelists and Apostles, in which we read much taken from the Old Testament which is not found in our manuscripts. For example, 'Out of Egypt have I called my Son' (Matt. 2.15): 'For he shall be called a Nazarene' (Ibid. 23): and 'They shall look on him whom they pierced' (John 19.37): and 'Rivers of living water shall flow out of his belly' (John 7.38): and 'Things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor have entered into the heart of man, which God hath prepared for them that love him' (1 Cor. 2.9), and many other passages which lack their proper context. Let us ask our opponents then where these things are written, and when they are unable to tell, let us produce them from the Hebrew. The first passage is in Hosea, (11.1), the second in Isaiah (11.1), the third in Zechariah (12.10), the fourth in Proverbs (18.4), the fifth also in Isaiah (64.4). ...

Are we condemning our predecessors? By no means; but following the zealous labors of those who have preceded us we contribute such work as lies in our power in the name of the Lord. They translated before the Advent of Christ, and expressed in ambiguous terms that which they knew not. We after His Passion and Resurrection write not prophecy so much as history. For one style is suitable to what we hear, another to what we see. The better we understand a subject, the better we describe it. Harken then, my rival: listen, my calumniator; I do not condemn, I do not censure the Seventy, but I am bold enough to prefer the Apostles to them all. It is the Apostle through whose mouth I hear the voice of Christ, and I read that in the classification of spiritual gifts they are placed before prophets (1 Cor. 12.28; Eph. 4.11), while interpreters occupy almost the lowest place. Why are you tormented with jealousy? Why do you inflame the minds of the ignorant against me? Wherever in translation I seem to you to go wrong, ask the Hebrews, consult their teachers in different towns. The words which exist in their Scriptures concerning Christ your copies do not contain. [From Jerome's Apology, Book II, Nicene and Post Nicene Fathers, Second Series, Vol 3.]

This is a fascinating passage. First, note that Jerome was correct in his statement that several New Testament passages follow the Hebrew meaning in distinction from the reading in the Septuagint. But it is curious that he believed the passage "For He shall be called a Nazarene" from Matthew 2.23 is a quotation from Isaiah - it is not. That passage does not exist in any of our current texts - in Hebrew or in Greek. (Isaiah 11.1 does, however, contain the Hebrew word for branch, neser.) Similarly, the passage "Things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor have entered into the heart of man, which God hath prepared for them that love him" is not to be found in Isaiah 64.4, according to the Masorettes. Again, the passage "Rivers of living water shall flow out of his belly" which Jerome attributes to Proverbs is not in our current Hebrew - though Proverbs 18.4 and Isaiah 58.11 both speak of water, there is no reference to that water's pouring out of anyone's belly. Did Jerome have access to a substantially different Hebrew source than we have today?

The other two examples Jerome provided to show how the Hebrew text enjoyed New Testament sanction are indeed absent from the Septuagint - see the list of similar passages. However, can Jerome have been ignorant of the far larger number of New Testament quotations from the Septuagint where the Greek version differs from the Hebrew? If New Testament warrant is the key determinant in deciding the source text to be employed in translation, the evidence fairly clearly supports the Septuagint over the Hebrew.

St. Augustine of Hippo was one of those who criticized Jerome's decision to make his translation into Latin out of the Hebrew. He was concerned about two issues: (1) that the new Latin translation would lead to divergences with the Greek-speaking part of the Church, and (2) that the translation would not be authoritative since Jerome's skill in the interpretation of Hebrew would be questioned, and validated only with great difficulty.

For my part, I would much rather that you would furnish us with a translation of the Greek version of the canonical Scriptures known as the work of the Seventy translators. For if your translation begins to be more generally read in many churches, it will be a grievous thing that, in the reading of Scripture, differences must arise between the Latin Churches and the Greek Churches, especially seeing that the discrepancy is easily condemned in a Latin version by the production of the original in Greek, which is a language very widely known; whereas, if any one has been disturbed by the occurrence of something to which he was not accustomed in the translation taken from the Hebrew, and alleges that the new translation is wrong, it will be found difficult, if not impossible, to get at the Hebrew documents by which the version to which exception is taken may be defended. And when they are obtained, who will submit, to have so many Latin and Greek authorities: pronounced to be in the wrong? Besides all this, Jews, if consulted as to the meaning of the Hebrew text, may give a different opinion from yours: in which case it will seem as if your presence were indispensable, as being the only one who could refute their view; and it would be a miracle if one could be found capable of acting as arbiter between you and them. [From Augustine of Hippo's, Letter LXXI, Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, First Series, Volume 1.]

It would perhaps be an interesting study to determine the extent to which using different Old Testament texts has contributed to the separation between East and West through the centuries. Some say that Augustine's own reliance on a poor Latin translation of the book of Romans led him into erroneous conclusions regarding original sin.

Augustine went on to state his desire that Jerome would provide a fresh translation of the Old Testament into Latin from the Septuagint, since it "has no mean authority, seeing that it has obtained so wide circulation, and was the one which the apostles used, as is ... proved by looking to the text itself." In that statement, I think, it is clear that Augustine was correct. Yet Jerome was of a contrary opinion, stating "Wherever the Seventy agree with the Hebrew, the apostles took their quotations from that translation; but, where they disagree, they set down in Greek what they had found in the Hebrew [Jerome's Apology, Book II]." But that claim is manifestly false - unless Jerome's Hebrew text was radically different from what we possess today.

Jerome accused the Jews who translated the Septuagint of deliberately altering the Hebrew meaning in order to avoid offending or misleading the Ptolemaic king of Egypt for whom the work of translation was done. His desire, he stated, was to bring to light the underlying Hebrew meaning that had been repressed by those Jewish translators. Jerome thus lacked the near-ubiquitous suspicion of the Hebrew text shared by those who were in polemical combat with the Jews in the early centuries. He seemed to take the Hebrew text available to him at the time as verity. The notion that the Septuagint may have been based on a different underlying Hebrew - for which hypothesis the Dead Sea Scrolls furnish positive evidence (see Appendix D) - seems never to have occurred to him.

One difficulty Jerome brought forth for those who would wish to prepare a translation into the Latin from the Septuagint, instead of the Hebrew, was the rarity of manuscripts that were not based on Origen's Hexapla edition. Origen had attempted to reconstruct the text of the Septuagint by comparing that text available to him with the Hebrew and other Greek translations. Following Origen's reconstructed Greek, Jerome had translated some of the canonical books into Latin. Augustine wrote to Jerome to ask him why he did not follow the same procedure in his new translation. Jerome replied:

In another letter you ask why a former translation which I made of some of the canonical books was carefully marked with asterisks and obelisks, whereas I afterwards published a translation without these. You must pardon my saying that you seem to me not to understand the matter: for the former translation is from the Septuagint; and wherever obelisks are placed, they are designed to indicate that the Seventy have said more than is found in the Hebrew. But the asterisks indicate what has been added by Origen from the version of Theodotion. In that version I was translating from the Greek: but in the later version, translating from the Hebrew itself, I have expressed what I understood it to mean, being careful to preserve rather the exact sense than the order of the words. I am surprised that you do not read the books of the Seventy translators in the genuine form in which they were originally given to the world, but as they have been corrected, or rather corrupted, by Origen, with his obelisks and asterisks; and that you refuse to follow the translation, however feeble, which has been given by a Christian man, especially seeing that Origen borrowed the things which he has added from the edition of a man who, after the passion of Christ, was a Jew and a blasphemer. Do you wish to be a true admirer and partisan of the Seventy translators? Then do not read what you find under the asterisks; rather erase them from the volumes, that you may approve yourself indeed a follower of the ancients. If, however, you do this, you will be compelled to find fault with all the libraries of the Churches; for you will scarcely find more than one Ms. here and there which has not these interpolations.

The copies of the Septuagint then widely available, according to Jerome, were actually Origen's redaction - and perhaps the editorial symbols that would have allowed one to locate the true Septuagint reading were missing from many of the copies in the libraries. But clearly Jerome had access to copies which contained Origen's symbols - in fact, the Hexapla was still extant in Caesarea of Palestine at the time Jerome wrote. And Jerome, as is clear, had translated some books into Latin from a copy of the Septuagint containing Origen's symbols.

Origen's reconstruction of the Septuagint was thought necessary, apparently, because of the diversity of readings in the many copies in circulation. In fact, in addition to Origen's version, two other recensions of the Septuagint were prepared early in the fourth century: one by Lucian of Antioch, and the other by Hesychius of Egypt. The Hebrew then available to Jerome did not share the problem of multiple variant readings. This is perhaps the true reason why Jerome chose to translate from the Hebrew instead of the Greek. Yet, from Jerome's remarks earlier, we can only surmise that his Hebrew text was somewhat different from our own, or his knowledge of the Hebrew language was inexact.

(One hundred years ago, it was thought that the fourth century uncial manuscript known as Vaticanus reflected a neutral Septuagint text - neutral in the sense that it is relatively unaffected by Origen, Lucian and Hesychius' efforts. Alexandrinus was said to show signs of both Origen and Lucian's revisions. But the frequent correspondence between Alexandrinus and the New Testament suggested that it preserved a more ancient text. At that time, no firm judgment of Sinaiticus had been formed. I do not know what the current state of scholarship is on this matter. In terms of printed editions of the Septuagint, the Complutensian Polyglot, printed in 1517, reflects the Lucianic recension to an extent, while the Aldine edition of 1519, the Hesychian. The Septuagint text used in the comparisons in this article is that of Sir Lawrence Brenton (1851). Brenton's text is based on Valpy's 1819 edition, which in turn depends upon the Sixtine edition of 1587. This last corresponds roughly with Vaticanus. Extensive use has also been made of Alfred Rahlfs' semi-critical edition of 1935, especially to identify variant readings.)

The difficulty involved in locating a relatively uniform source from which to translate should not be an overwhelming deterrent to translation. If it were, we would not have the New Testament in English today: variant readings in the multiple extant New Testament manuscripts have elicited several recensions of that text since Erasmus' time. So, though it was true that the Hebrew text had been standardized to an extent since the Septuagint was generated, and was thus likely to be more uniform than the Greek, these facts hardly justify abandoning the Old Testament of the apostles.

Contrast Origen's viewpoint with Jerome's. Though he was aware of numerous instances of divergence between the Septuagint readings and those of the Hebrew, yet his trust in God's providence prevented him from automatically assuming that the Greek version was in error. How could God have suffered His Church to use an erroneous version of scripture for the first two hundred years of Its existence?

Again, through the whole of Job there are many passages in the Hebrew which are wanting in our copies, generally four or five verses, but sometimes, however, even fourteen, and nineteen, and sixteen. But why should I enumerate all the instances I collected with so much labor, to prove that the difference between our copies and those of the Jews did not escape me? In Jeremiah I noticed many instances, and indeed in that book I found much transposition and variation in the readings of the prophecies. Again, in Genesis, the words, "God saw that it was good," when the firmament was made, are not found in the Hebrew, and there is no small dispute among them about this; and other instances are to be found in Genesis, which I marked, for the sake of distinction, with the sign the Greeks call an obelisk, as on the other hand I marked with an asterisk those passages in our copies which are not found in the Hebrew. What needs there to speak of Exodus, where there is such diversity in what is said about the tabernacle and its court, and the ark, and the garments of the high priest and the priests, that sometimes the meaning even does not seem to be akin? And, forsooth, when we notice such things, we are forthwith to reject as spurious the copies in use in our Churches, and enjoin the brotherhood to put away the sacred books current among them, and to coax the Jews, and persuade them to give us copies which shall be untampered with, and free from forgery! Are we to suppose that that Providence which in the sacred Scriptures has ministered to the edification of all the Churches of Christ, had no thought for those bought with a price, for whom Christ died; whom, although His Son, God who is love spared not, but gave Him up for us all, that with Him He might freely give us all things?

Indeed, Origen remained true to the Septuagint, but he also perceived great value in knowledge of the Hebrew, particularly in discussions with the Jews.

In all these cases consider whether it would not be well to remember the words, "Thou shalt not remove the ancient landmarks which thy fathers have set." Nor do I say this because I shun the labor of investigating the Jewish Scriptures, and comparing them with ours, and noticing their various readings. This, if it be not arrogant to say it, I have already to a great extent done to the best of my ability, laboring hard to get at the meaning in all the editions and various readings; while I paid particular attention to the interpretation of the Seventy, lest I might be found to accredit any forgery to the Churches which are under heaven, and give an occasion to those who seek such a starting-point for gratifying their desire to slander the common brethren, and to bring some accusation against those who shine forth in our community. And I make it my endeavor not to be ignorant of their various readings, lest in my controversies with the Jews I should quote to them what is not found in their copies, and that I may make some use of what is found there, even although it should not be in our Scriptures. For if we are so prepared for them in our discussions, they will not, as is their manner, scornfully laugh at Gentile believers for their ignorance of the true reading as they have them. [Origen, A Letter from Origen to Africanus, Ante-Nicene Fathers, Volume 4.]

We find the same regard for the Septuagint a few years earlier, in the second century, when we examine the writings of Sts. Irenaeus of Lyons and Justin Martyr. In his Against Heresies, Irenaeus discussed one point of contention between the Jews and Christians of his day over the Old Testament - the prophecy of the virgin in Isaiah 7.14:

God, then, was made man, and the Lord did Himself save us, giving us the token of the Virgin. But not as some allege, among those now presuming to expound the Scripture, [thus:] "Behold, a young woman shall conceive, and bring forth a son," as Theodotion the Ephesian has interpreted, and Aquila of Pontus, both Jewish proselytes. The Ebionites, following these, assert that He was begotten by Joseph; thus destroying, as far as in them lies, such a marvelous dispensation of God, and setting aside the testimony of the prophets which proceeded from God. For truly this prediction was uttered before the removal of the people to Babylon; that is, anterior to the supremacy acquired by the Medes and Persians. But it was interpreted into Greek by the Jews themselves, much before the period of our Lord's advent, that there might remain no suspicion that perchance the Jews, complying with our humor, did put this interpretation upon these words. They indeed, had they been cognizant of our future existence, and that we should use these proofs from the Scriptures, would themselves never have hesitated to burn their own Scriptures, which do declare that all other nations partake of [eternal] life, and show that they who boast themselves as being the house of Jacob and the people of Israel, are disinherited from the grace of God. [From Irenaeus, Against Heresies, Book III, Chapter XXI, Ante-Nicene Fathers, Volume 1.]

Irenaeus argued that since the Jews themselves made this translation - which proves the deity of the Savior - long before the advent of Christ, it is free from bias; while their new translations (those of Aquila and Theodotion) are tainted by their hatred for Christianity. The extent of Irenaeus' admiration for the Septuagint can be gauged from the following account of the history of the translation, which hints at divine involvement. This account differs somewhat from that given in The Letter of Aristeas, discussed in the Introduction:

For before the Romans possessed their kingdom, while as yet the Macedonians held Asia, Ptolemy the son of Lagus, being anxious to adorn the library which he had founded in Alexandria, with a collection of the writings of all men, which were [works] of merit, made request to the people of Jerusalem, that they should have their Scriptures translated into the Greek language. And they - for at that time they were still subject to the Macedonians - sent to Ptolemy seventy of their elders, who were thoroughly skilled in the Scriptures and in both the languages, to carry out what he had desired. But he, wishing to test them individually, and fearing lest they might perchance, by taking counsel together, conceal the truth in the Scriptures, by their interpretation, separated them from each other, and commanded them all to write the same translation. He did this with respect to all the books. But when they came together in the same place before Ptolemy, and each of them compared his own interpretation with that of every other, God was indeed glorified, and the Scriptures were acknowledged as truly divine. For all of them read out the common translation [which they had prepared] in the very same words and the very same names, from beginning to end, so that even the Gentiles present perceived that the Scriptures had been interpreted by the inspiration of God. And there was nothing astonishing in God having done this, - He who, when, during the captivity of the people under Nebuchadnezzar, the Scriptures had been corrupted, and when, after seventy years, the Jews had returned to their own land, then, in the times of Artaxerxes king of the Persians, inspired Esdras the priest, of the tribe of Levi, to recast all the words of the former prophets, and to re-establish with the people the Mosaic legislation.

Irenaeus, as Augustine did more than two centuries later, acknowledged that the witness of the New Testament authors is in favor of the Septuagint:

Since, therefore, the Scriptures have been interpreted with such fidelity, and by the grace of God, and since from these God has prepared and formed again our faith towards His Son, and has preserved to us the unadulterated Scriptures in Egypt, where the house of Jacob flourished, fleeing from the famine in Canaan; where also our Lord was preserved when He fled from the persecution set on foot by Herod; and [since] this interpretation of these Scriptures was made prior to our Lord's descent [to earth], and came into being before the Christians appeared - for our Lord was born about the forty-first year of the reign of Augustus; but Ptolemy was much earlier, under whom the Scriptures were interpreted; - [since these things are so, I say,] truly these men are proved to be impudent and presumptuous, who would now show a desire to make different translations, when we refute them out of these Scriptures, and shut them up to a belief in the advent of the Son of God. But our faith is steadfast, unfeigned, and the only true one, having clear proof from these Scriptures, which were interpreted in the way I have related; and the preaching of the Church is without interpolation. For the apostles, since they are of more ancient date than all these [heretics], agree with this aforesaid translation; and the translation harmonizes with the tradition of the apostles. For Peter, and John, and Matthew, and Paul, and the rest successively, as well as their followers, did set forth all prophetic [announcements], just as the interpretation of the elders contains them.

Thus, in Irenaeus' view, just as God preserved the Israelites through the time of famine safe in the land of Egypt, God kept his word safe in Alexandria though the instrumentality of unbiased Jewish translators.

Writing just a few years earlier than Irenaeus, Justin Martyr presented the same history of the Septuagint's production. Then he added:

These things, ye men of Greece, are no fable, nor do we narrate fictions; but we ourselves having been in Alexandria, saw the remains of the little cots at the Pharos still preserved, and having heard these things from the inhabitants, who had received them as part of their country's tradition, we now tell to you what you can also learn from others, and specially from those wise and esteemed men who have written of these things, Philo and Josephus, and many others. [From Justin's Hortatory Address to the Greeks, Ante-Nicene Fathers, Volume 1.]

Though he was willing to debate the Jews on the basis of their version of scripture, Justin alleged that the Jews had removed passages which he discovered only in the Septuagint.

In short, the vast majority of early Christian writers quoted extensively from the Septuagint, and some considered it a divinely inspired translation. St. Clement of Rome, writing in the first century, provides the earliest non-canonical example. It has been estimated that approximately half of his Old Testament quotations are directly from the Septuagint, the remainder being variations due to imperfect memory on the one hand and the use of a text closer to the second century Greek translations of Theodotion or Aquila on the other. Until the religious controversy with Christians arose, the Septuagint was held in very high regard by Jews also. Philo of Alexandria - who, with Irenaeus and Justin, believed that the seventy-two translators had miraculously produced identical translations though isolated in separate cells - and Josephus are eminent examples.

But it is also true that all the Fathers of the Church did not share an aversion to the Hebrew text. One can find examples where they consulted with those knowledgeable in Hebrew in order to gain a deeper understanding of the Biblical message. St. Basil the Great, for instance, in commenting on the text "the Spirit of God was borne upon the face of the waters" says:

How then did the Spirit of God move upon the waters? The explanation that I am about to give you is not an original one, but that of a Syrian, who was as ignorant in the wisdom of this world as he was versed in the knowledge of the Truth. He said, then, that the Syriac word was more expressive, and that being more analogous to the Hebrew term it was a nearer approach to the scriptural sense. This is the meaning of the word; by "was borne" the Syrians, he says, understand: it cherished the nature of the waters as one sees a bird cover the eggs with her body and impart to them vital force from her own warmth. Such is, as nearly as possible, the meaning of these words - the Spirit was borne: let us understand, that is, prepared the nature of water to produce living beings: a sufficient proof for those who ask if the Holy Spirit took an active part in the creation of the world [The Hexaemeron, Homily II, Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, Second Series, Volume 8].

Similarly, St. Gregory of Nyssa consulted Aquila and Symmachus' translations from an original very close to the Masoretic Hebrew to clarify the meaning of Genesis 1.2. (See his Hexaemeron.) When discussing the meaning of Proverbs 8.27, Gregory indicated a willingness to consult the Hebrew to ascertain the meaning of the word rendered "created" in the Septuagint [Against Eunomius, Book I, Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, Second Series, Volume 5, page 63]. Perhaps we should emulate the early Christians' faithfulness to the Septuagint - on the grounds that it is the Old Testament largely witnessed by the New - but temper that loyalty with appreciation for the current Hebrew text.

The claim, repeated above by Irenaeus and Augustine, that the New Testament authors relied upon the Septuagint, is examined in the second major section of this: "The Septuagint in the New Testament."

4.0 The Septuagint in the New Testament

4.1 General Observations

The following table provides a summary overview of New Testament quotations from the Old Testament. Twenty-four Old Testament books, listed in the first column of the table - Genesis through Malachi - , are quoted in sixteen New Testament books - Matthew through 2 Peter - , named in the top row. The next row provides the total number of quotations from the Old Testament in each New Testament book. In addition, this line shows the total of all verses in the Old Testament books quoted, the total number of quotations (320), and the frequency of quotations for those books taken as a whole. Thus, for the 24 Old Testament books listed, the average frequency of quotations is 18.0 per every thousand verses. Of course, if the entire Old Testament were taken into account, the quotation frequency would be much lower. To include verse counts from books not quoted (Joshua, Judges, 1 & 2 Chronicles, etc.) would, however, ensnare us in the question of the Old Testament canon, which is outside the scope of the present investigation.³

As a guide to reading the table, note that the book of Genesis has 1508 verses and is quoted 31 times in the New Testament. The number of quotations from Genesis, divided by the number of verses in that book and multiplied by 1000, yields 20.6 - implying that Genesis was a bit more popular with New Testament authors than the average Old Testament book. Continuing along the "Genesis" row, we see that four of these quotations appear in the book of Acts, and nine in Romans. Looking along the columns, observe that the book of John quotes the Old Testament only 14 times - the least of any gospel. John quotes the Psalms seven times, Isaiah four times, and Zechariah twice. (Fractional quotations will be explained shortly.)

Some additional remarks about the table:

(1) the reader may notice that fractional quotations are listed. The reason for this is that in cases such as Matthew 5.33 and 5.38, multiple Old Testament books contain the same quotation. Since it is impossible to tell which book is being quoted, each is given partial credit. For instance, Matthew may have had Exodus 21.24, Leviticus 19.12 or Deuteronomy 19.21 in mind in Matthew 5.38. Each Old Testament book is thus given one-third credit.

(2) The verse count for each book is based on the Authorized Version. The Septuagint will have different verse counts for some of these books. It was my judgment that the variation in book length between the Septuagint and Hebrew-based English translations would be an insignificant factor. The greatest discrepancies will be for Jeremiah, Daniel and Job, books not particularly popular with New Testament authors.

(3) Many of these 320 distinct quotations are of the same Old Testament passage. For instance, each time the author of the book of Hebrews quotes Psalm 95.7, it is counted as a separate citation.

³ Appendix F provides evidence that the New Testament authors were influenced by Deuterocanonical material, but draws no conclusions regarding the boundaries of the canon.

Notice that fifteen Old Testament books from the Hebrew canon are not quoted at all: Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 2 Kings, 1 & 2 Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, Lamentations, Obadiah, Nahum, and Zephaniah.

Of those that are quoted, Psalms and Isaiah are the most popular, followed by Deuteronomy and Exodus. These four books show good strength of usage across the span of New Testament books. Eighty-two percent of all Old Testament quotations are from just six books: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Deuteronomy, Psalms and Isaiah.

If the size of the Old Testament books is taken into account, one realizes that the tiny works of Malachi and Habakkuk were very rich with meaning for the New Testament authors. When popularity is measured in this way, Isaiah and Deuteronomy come in third and fourth respectively. Hosea is fifth and Zechariah sixth.

Other observations: almost one-third of the quotations in Romans are from Isaiah, while 43% of the quotations in Hebrews are from Psalms. Matthew and Luke rely on the books of the Law for almost 40% of their quotes (this jumps to 50% with Mark), but John avoids the Torah almost completely, concentrating instead on Psalms, Isaiah and Zechariah.

Ezekiel, a relatively large book, is quoted only one and one-half times in the New Testament. It has the lowest quotation frequency for any book actually referenced.

4.2 Agreement with the Septuagint

4.2.1 Methodology

The basic set of quotations for this study was furnished by the “Index of Quotations” in Aland, Karavidopoulos, Martini and Metzger’s The Greek New Testament, Fourth Revised Edition, published by the United Bible Societies. Hereafter, I will refer to this source as UBS. I was unable, however, to see any connection between 2 Samuel 7.8 and 2 Corinthians 6.18, listed in UBS as a quotation, so I deleted this item from the set. Two additional exceptions: UBS presents Mt 21.5 as a single quotation from two sources - Isaiah 62.11 and Zechariah 9.9. It seems clear, however, that this should be viewed as two non-overlapping quotations, since Isaiah 62.11 simply provides an opening phrase which the quotation from Zechariah follows. In addition, UBS views Luke 4.18-19 as a quotation from Isaiah 61.1 alone. However, since Luke has introduced a line from Isaiah 58.6 into the midst of that quotation, I have followed suit.

I must say that several of the quotations in the Index hardly seem like quotations at all. In addition, several passages which seem fairly clearly to be quotations (Daniel 11.31/12.11 in Matthew 24.15/Mark 13.14; Isaiah 66.24 in Mark 9.48; Sirach 4.1 in Mark 10.19; Jeremiah 11.7 in Mark 11.17; Isaiah 53.12 in Mark 15.28; Malachi 4.5-6 in Luke 1.17; Psalm 62.12/Psalm 24.12 in Romans 2.6; Isaiah 8.12 in 1 Peter 3.14; Psalm 2.8, 9 in Revelation 2.27; Isaiah 22.22 in Revelation 3.7; Leviticus 5.7 in Luke 2.24; and others) are missing from the Index. I was tempted to scrub the list of quotations of questionable entries (Deuteronomy 25.5 is a good example) and augment it with more worthy ones. However, employing an objective set of quotations provided by an outside source bolsters the objectivity of the work. In addition, the questionable quotations and the candidates for inclusion appear not to influence the overall conclusions in any significant way.

For each quotation, I have prepared a side-by-side comparison of the New Testament and Septuagint Greek texts (Appendix C). The New Testament column is from UBS, while the Septuagint is Brenton's text – although textual variations were considered for both testaments. To add clarity, and to provide an opportunity to assess agreement with the Masoretic Hebrew text, I supplemented this primary Greek comparison with Brenton's English translation of the Septuagint, and the Old and New Testament passages in the English of the 1901 American Standard Version (with editorial modifications of my own, such as the replacement of "Jehovah" with "Yahweh"). My own comments appear in the footnotes.

(One word of caution: I am no expert in Greek. With tools such as those provided at the Perseus Project web site, I can translate New Testament and Septuagint passages. However, I have little to no familiarity with Hebrew. Thus, I have relied on a variety of translations - and the definitions given in Young's Analytical Concordance - to assess the meaning of the Masoretic text.)

As I proceeded to prepare side-by-side comparisons of the quotations, I noticed a tendency on the part of New Testament authors to deviate from the exact wording of the Septuagint, though they often kept the same sense, or applied the text in a novel way. For instance, they would change the person and/or number of a verb to suit their purposes. Strictly speaking, these were usually deviations from both the Hebrew and the Septuagint; thus, these deviations seemed of no consequence in the evaluation of the influence of the Septuagint on the New Testament. However, there were cases where the Septuagint and the Hebrew differed in meaning, and the New Testament followed one against the sense of the other.

I determined, therefore, to categorize the comparisons in two separate ways. First, I would assess the meaning of the texts, and evaluate the degree of agreement: where the Septuagint and the Masoretic text differ in meaning, did the New Testament author follow the sense of the Septuagint against the Hebrew, or did he follow the Hebrew against the Septuagint? Second, I would assess the degree to which the New Testament author employed poetic license in his use of the Septuagint.

4.2.2 Assessment of Agreement in Meaning

The New Testament authors show a clear tendency to use Septuagint rather than Masoretic readings. The following table provides a selection of thirty of the more significant New Testament deviations toward the Septuagint. The second column shows the New Testament wording, and the rightmost column has the wording from the Hebrew Old Testament. In each case, the New Testament author is true to the Septuagint. Bold font is used to highlight differences between Hebrew and Greek. All quotations are from the Revised Standard Version.

Table 2: Sample New Testament Quotations of the Septuagint

New/Old Testament Reference	New Testament/Septuagint	Old Testament/Masoretic Text
Mt 1.23/ Is 7.14	“Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and his name shall be called Emmanuel” (which means, God with us).”	Behold, a young woman shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel.
Mt 12.21/ Is 42.4	“and in his name will the Gentiles hope. ”	And the coastlands wait for his law.
Mt 13.14-15/ Is 6.9-10	“For this people's heart has grown dull, and their ears are heavy of hearing, and their eyes they have closed”	Make the heart of this people fat, and their ears heavy, and shut their eyes
Mt 15.8-9/ Is 29.13	“ in vain do they worship me, teaching as doctrines the precepts of men.”	and their fear of me is a commandment of men learned by rote
Mt 21.16/ Ps 8.2	“ Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast brought perfect praise”	by the mouths of babes and infants thou hast founded a bulwark
Lk 3.4-6/ Is 40.3-5	“and all flesh shall see the salvation of God. ”	And all flesh shall see it together
Lk 4.18-19/ Is 61.1-2	“to proclaim release to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind ”	to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to those who are bound
Acts 7.42-43/ Amos 5.25-27	“And you took up the tent of Moloch, and the star of the god Rephan, the figures which you made to worship”	You shall take up Sakkuth your king, and Kaiwan your star-god, your images, which you made for yourselves
Acts 8.32-33/ Is 53.7-8	“In his humiliation justice was denied him, Who can describe his generation? For his life is taken up from the earth.”	By oppression and judgment he was taken away; and as for his generation, who considered that he was cut off out of the land of the living
Acts 13.41/ Hab 1.5	“Behold, you scoffers, and wonder, and perish ”	Look among the nations, and see; wonder and be astounded
Acts 15.16-17/ Amos 9.11-12	“that the rest of men may seek the Lord, and all the Gentiles who are called by my name”	that they may possess the remnant of Edom and all the nations who are called by my name
Rom 2.24/ Is 52.5	“The name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles because of you. ”	Their rulers wail, says the LORD, and continually all the day my name is despised
Rom 9.27-28/ Is 10.22-23	“Though the number of the sons of Israel be as the sand of the sea, only a remnant of them shall be saved ”	For though your people Israel be as the sand of the sea, only a remnant of them will return

Notes on the Septuagint

New/Old Testament Reference	New Testament/Septuagint	Old Testament/Masoretic Text
Rom 10.20/ Is 65.1	"I have shown myself to those who did not ask for me"	I was ready to be sought by those who did not ask for me
Rom 11.9-10/ Ps 69.22	"Let their table become a snare and a trap, a pitfall and a retribution for them ; let their eyes be darkened so that they cannot see, and bend their backs for ever. "	Let their own table before them become a snare; let their sacrificial feasts [Heb. - for security] be a trap. Let their eyes be darkened, so that they cannot see; and make their loins tremble continually
Rom 11.26-27/ Is 59.20-21	"The Deliverer will come from Zion, he will banish ungodliness from Jacob "	And he will come to Zion as Redeemer, to those in Jacob who turn from transgression
Rom 11.34/ Is 40.13	"For who has known the mind of the Lord , or who has been his counselor?"	Who has directed the Spirit of the LORD , or as his counselor instructed him?
Rom 15.12/ Is 11.10	"The root of Jesse shall come, he who rises to rule the Gentiles ; in him shall the Gentiles hope."	the root of Jesse shall stand as an ensign to the peoples ; him shall the nations seek
Heb 1.6/ Deut 32.43	" Let all God's angels worship him. "	The Masoretic Text omits this quotation
Heb 2.6-8/ Ps 8.4-6	"Thou didst make him a little lower than the angels "	thou hast made him a little less than God
Heb 2.13/ Is 8.17	"I will put my trust in him."	I will hope in him
Heb 3.15/ Ps 95.7-8	"Today, when you hear his voice, do not harden your hearts as in the rebellion. "	O that today you would hearken to his voice! Harden not your hearts, as at Meribah
Heb 8.8-12/ Jer 31.31-34	"for they did not continue in my covenant, and so I paid no heed to them , says the Lord"	my covenant which they broke, though I was their husband , says the LORD
Heb 10.5-7/ Ps 40.6-8	"Sacrifices and offerings thou hast not desired; but a body hast thou prepared for me "	Sacrifice and offering thou dost not desire; but thou hast given me an open ear
Heb 10.37-38/ Hab 2.3-4	" and if he shrinks back, my soul has no pleasure in him. "	Behold, he whose soul is not upright in him shall fail [Heb. - is puffed up]
Heb 11.21/ Gen 47.31	"By faith Jacob ... bowing in worship over the head of his staff. "	Then Israel bowed himself upon the head of his bed
Heb 12.5-6/ Prov 3.11-12	"For the Lord disciplines him whom he loves, and chastises every son whom he receives. "	for the LORD reproves him whom he loves, as a father the son in whom he delights
James 4.6/ Prov 3.34	" God opposes the proud , but gives grace to the humble."	Toward the scorners he is scornful , but to the humble he shows favor
1 Pet 2.22/ Is 53.9	"He committed no sin ; no guile was found on his lips"	although he had done no violence , and there was no deceit in his mouth
1 Pet 4.18/ Prov 11.31	"If the righteous man is scarcely saved, where will the impious and sinner appear? "	If the righteous is requited on earth, how much more the wicked and the sinner!

Matthew relies on the Septuagint for the assertion that the Messiah's mother was to be a virgin (Matthew 1.23). Jesus himself follows the traditional Septuagint wording in condemning the Pharisees' traditions (Matthew 15.8-9). The Septuagint clearly prophesies that Jesus will heal the blind (Luke 4.18-19) - but the Masoretic text is more obscure. The Septuagint foretold that the Messiah's death would be unjust (Acts 8.32-33) and that the Gentiles would seek the Lord (Acts 15.16-17). The Hebrew has the nations being “possessed” along with Edom. Paul knows that a remnant of Israel will be saved because he was reading the Old Testament in Greek (Romans 9.27-28). Perhaps if his topic were the return to the Holy Land and not salvation, he would have found the Hebrew reading more suitable. Following the Greek, he knows that the Messiah will conquer his people’s sin - not that he would come to those who had already cleansed themselves from sin, as the Hebrew would have it (Romans 11.26-27). Paul’s thought that Jesus would rule the Gentiles also depends on a Septuagint reading (Romans 15.12). The author of the book of Hebrews - to prove the deity of Christ - proclaims the truth that Jesus is worshipped by all the angels of God (Hebrews 1.6). But the Hebrew Old Testament does not contain that verse. Also on the basis of the Greek Old Testament, that author asserts that the incarnation was prophesied (Hebrews 10.5-7) - that Jesus would have a body, which he would offer for our sanctification (Hebrews 10.10). The Masoretic text at this point stresses auditory capability. Finally, where the Masoretic text described a nonviolent suffering servant, the Septuagint prophesied a sinless Messiah (1 Peter 2.22).

The Table of Quotations in New Testament Order (Appendix B) contains a column entitled “Meaning.” Some quotations are annotated in this column with a “J,” an “H,” or a “D.” A “J” indicates that the quotation agrees with the Septuagint against the sense of the Masoretic text, an “H” that the quotation supports the Hebrew sense against the Septuagint. The quotation is marked by a “D” when the quotation disagrees in meaning with both the Septuagint and the Hebrew. The following table summarizes the disagreement of the New Testament with the Septuagint as a source. The general structure of the table is the same as Table 1 above. For each New Testament book, the number of quotations from each Old Testament book is shown, but the number of times the New Testament reading differs in meaning from the Septuagint text - both “H” and “D” readings - is also indicated. Thus, Matthew differs in sense from the Septuagint 9 times out of 54 quotations. Three of these disagreements occur when Matthew quotes from Isaiah. Looking along the rows, note that Deuteronomy is quoted against the sense of the Septuagint 7 times, two of these quotations occurring in the book of Romans.

The following two tables summarize these results, providing percentage agreement for each Old Testament and New Testament book. For instance, Zechariah is quoted 7 times, 5 of which are in agreement with the meaning of the Septuagint text. Thus, the New Testament follows the Septuagint's version of Zechariah 71.4% of the time. Similarly, Luke follows the Septuagint in 24 of 26 passages, for a percentage agreement = 92.3.

Other conclusions can be drawn. Considering the New Testament as comprised of the synoptic gospels, John, Acts, Paul's epistles, Hebrews, and the catholic epistles, the following agreement percentages are found:

Synoptic gospels	- 86.9
John	- 92.9
Acts	- 100
Paul's epistles -	94.2
Hebrews	- 97.3
Catholic epistles	- 94.1

If we group Luke's writings, Luke and Acts, we find an agreement rate of 97%. Clearly, the gospels tend to diverge from the Septuagint most frequently, with Matthew showing the most divergence.

Looking instead at the source books, the agreement between the New Testament and the Septuagintal versions of Job, Micah and Malachi is quite poor.

Perhaps the most impressive aspect of Table 4 relates to the excellent agreement for Genesis, Exodus and Psalms, with almost 139 quotations drawn from these three books, and only one disagreement.

Overall, the agreement in sense between the New Testament and the Septuagint is 93%. This compares favorably with the rate of agreement between the New Testament quotations and the Hebrew Old Testament, 68%. An analysis of the degree of agreement between the Hebrew Old Testament and New Testament quotations - similar to that just presented for the Septuagint - is provided in Appendix A.

The following figure (Figure 2) compares the results presented in Table 4 with similar results comparing agreement between the New Testament and the Masoretic text. Septuagint results are presented in blue, while those for the Masoretic text are in red. Note in particular the tendency of the New Testament authors to disagree with the Masoretic version of Isaiah.

Agreement by Old Testament Book (Septuagint versus Hebrew)

In fact, among all the books quoted most frequently - Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Deuteronomy, Psalms and Isaiah - the Septuagint does better than the Masoretic text.

Masoretic readings prevail in the New Testament when the source is Job, Zechariah or Malachi. It is understandable, therefore, that Jerome, in his critiques of the Septuagint, emphasized passages from Hosea and Zechariah to support his contention that the New Testament authors diverged from the Septuagint whenever the Greek departed in meaning from the Hebrew. Evidently, he was embarrassed by the Septuagint - and this embarrassment blinded him to the New Testament's reliance on readings found in that version. "It would be tedious now to enumerate, what great additions and omissions the Septuagint has made, and all the passages which in church-copies are marked with daggers and asterisks [symbols indicating words present in the Greek but absent in the Hebrew, and vice versa]. The Jews generally laugh when they hear our version of this passage of Isaiah, 'Blessed is he that hath seed in Zion and servants in Jerusalem [Is. 31.9].' In Amos also ... But how shall we deal with the Hebrew originals in which these passages and others like them are omitted, passages so numerous that to reproduce them would require books without number? [Letter LVII]" One wonders whether Jerome would have been able to overcome this evident social pressure against the Greek version if he had been aware of the diversity of the ancient Hebrew texts.

Similar results are presented by New Testament book in Figure 3, immediately below.

As a rule, each New Testament author agrees with the Septuagint translators more frequently than with the Massorettes. The most striking contrasts are in John's gospel, Acts, Romans, Galatians, Hebrews, James and 1 Peter.

Although, as noted above, the disagreement with the Septuagint is most pronounced in the synoptic gospels, these diverge from the Masoretic text even more strongly than they do from the Septuagint. This is not at all what one would have expected from reading Jerome's Lives of Illustrious Men. "Matthew, also called Levi, apostle and aforesometimes publican, composed a gospel of Christ at first published in Judea in Hebrew for the sake of those of the circumcision who believed, but this was afterwards translated into Greek though by what author is uncertain. The Hebrew itself has been preserved until the present day in the library at Caesarea which Pamphilus so diligently gathered. I have also had the opportunity of having this volume described to me by the Nazarenes of Borea, a city of Syria, who use it. In this it is to be noted that wherever the Evangelist, whether on his own account or in the person of our Lord the Saviour quotes the testimony of the Old Testament he does not follow the authority of the translators of the Septuagint but the Hebrew." The reader can himself test the verity of this statement directly or by consulting Figure 3 (page 26), which shows that even Matthew's quotations agree with the Septuagint more frequently than with the Hebrew.

4.2.3 Presentation of New Testament Divergences from the Septuagint

For completeness, I present here a table (similar to Table 2 above) showing those instances where the New Testament follows the Hebrew sense against the Septuagint. Two of these, Malachi 3.1 (3 times) and Isaiah 8.14 (twice), are quoted by several New Testament authors. Since Romans 9.33/Isaiah 8.14 is counted as half a quotation, the New Testament follows the Hebrew against the sense of the Septuagint 8.5 times.

As with Table 2, the quotations from the New Testament in Table 7 are from the Revised Standard Version. The Septuagint column is from Brenton’s translation, as it is in the following.

The next table depicts occasions where the New Testament diverges in meaning from both the Hebrew of the Massorettes and the Septuagint. Bold type is used to indicate discrepancies in meaning. Italic type indicates the words are omitted from the New Testament quotation. Certain words are underlined in Mark 12.29-30 to facilitate comparison. The translations in both the New Testament and Masoretic Text columns are from the Revised Standard Version.

All together, there are 14 such instances in the New Testament (the additional 3 being duplicates of quotations presented in Table 8). The distribution is as follows: Matthew (7), Mark (2), Luke (1), Romans (2), 1 Corinthians (1) and Hebrews (1). These 14 instances, together with the 8.5 from Table 7, tally to 22.5 cases where the New Testament disagrees with the sense of the Septuagint (see Table 3 above).

4.2.4 Assessment of the Agreement in Wording between the New Testament and the Septuagint

In the previous section, the agreement in meaning between New and Old Testament passages was evaluated. In the following, the precision of agreement in wording will be examined. As is expected, the percentage of quotations with exact or near exact duplication in wording is lower than the percentage agreeing in sense or intention. Jerome (Letter LVII), after reviewing passages such as those in Table 8 above, remarked: “From all these passages it is clear that the apostles and evangelists in translating the old testament scriptures have sought to give the meaning rather than the words, and that they have not greatly cared to preserve forms or constructions, so long as they could make clear the subject to understanding.” While it is true that these authors did not feel rigorous fidelity in quotation was a requirement, the degree to which “forms or constructions” in the Septuagint were preserved in the New Testament is remarkable.

The table of quotations in New Testament order (Appendix B) includes a column labeled with the following letters:

P - perfect or near-perfect quotation from the Septuagint - only minor differences, such as word order, articles, inconsequential pronouns, etc.

S - perfect but some words replaced with synonyms (example - Romans 9.17) or with words of related meaning.

O - the New Testament omits portions of the Septuagint text - ellipsis (example - Mark 7.6-7).

L - poetic license employed by the New Testament author: a portion of the Septuagint is replaced or reconstructed (example - Hebrews 10.5-7).

A - the New Testament author augments the Septuagint with additional wording (example - Romans 11.9-10).

F - fragmentary (some words in common - replacements as frequent or more so).

E - few to no words in common (empty set).

Perfect (P) quotations and those simply involving an ellipsis (O) show the highest fidelity to the Septuagint, while the other end of the spectrum is represented by cases where few to no common words can be found (E) or where the same words appear, but in a fragmentary fashion (F). In between are the cases of poetic license (L) and those where liberty of a more restrained form has been taken - through the use of synonyms (S) and by the augmentation (A) of the Old Testament wording with an idea foreign to the literal sense of the text.

Examples of these last three are perhaps in order. Malachi 3.1 is an example of an “L” - the New Testament author, following the sense of the Masoretic text - replaces the idea of the messenger surveying the way of the Messiah with that of preparation. Another example of an “L” is provided by 1 Corinthians 3.20/Psalm 94.11. There, “the Lord knows the thoughts of men” is altered to “the Lord knows the thoughts of the wise.”

As an example of the New Testament authors’ use of synonymms (S), consider Galatians 4.30/Genesis 21.10. The Septuagint translates as, “Cast out this bondswoman and her son, for the son of this bondswoman shall not inherit with my son Isaac.” Paul has transformed this to read, “Cast out the handmaid and her son: for the son of the handmaid shall not inherit with the son of the freewoman.”

Augmentation (A) is seen in, for instance, in Acts 2.17-21/Joel 2.28-32. Luke appends the words “and they shall prophesy” to the quotation “Yea and on my servants and on my handmaidens in those days will I pour forth of my Spirit.”

Total	63.9	4.1	7.0	18.1	4.7	2.2

Several conclusions can be drawn. First, the majority of New Testament quotations are taken from the Septuagint without change or with relatively minor changes - 64 percent. Second, the New Testament authors felt no qualms about modifying the Old Testament passages to support their message - A, S, and L-type quotations amounting to about 29 percent. Third, roughly 7 percent of quotations (22 altogether) are fragmentary or unrecognizable as quotations. Of these, only 12 are introduced by a formula of quotation, such as "it is written." Thus, only 12 quotations - unambiguously identified as quotations - depart radically from the wording of the Septuagint.

4.3 Further Evidence of the Influence of the Septuagint

Why does Stephen say that seventy-five entered into Egypt when Joseph sent for them (Acts 7.14), when the Masoretic text clearly reports there were seventy in all? "All the persons of the house of Jacob who came into Egypt were seventy" – Genesis 46.27. It appears, however, that Stephen was not in error. He was simply backing the Septuagint account: "all the souls of the house of Jacob who came with Joseph into Egypt were seventy-five souls." (Incidentally, this Septuagint reading of seventy-five is also found in one of the scrolls from Qumran.)

The Hebrew backs this reading of Genesis 10.24: "And Arphaxad begat Salah." The Septuagint has, "And Arphaxad begat Cainan, and Cainan begat Sala." Similarly, the Hebrew in Genesis 11.12-13 is translated as: "And Arphaxad lived five and thirty years, and begat Salah; And Arphaxad lived after he had begat Salah four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters. And Salah lived thirty years, and begat Eber." But the Septuagint has, "And Arphaxad lived a hundred and thirty-five years, and begot Cainan. And Arphaxad lived after he had begotten Cainan, four hundred years, and begot sons and daughters, and died. And Cainan lived a hundred and thirty years and begot Sala; and Cainan lived after he had begotten Sala, three hundred and thirty years, and begot sons and daughters, and died." The apostle Luke apparently had the Septuagint account in mind when he listed the ancestry of the Christ. He wrote, "which was the son of Sala, which was the son of Cainan, which was the son of Arphaxad." (Luke 3.35-36).

Paul leaves a clue in Galatians 3.16-17: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, that the covenant, which was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect." Does the Hebrew support a span of 430 years from the giving of the promises to Abraham and the giving of the Law? Apparently not, for the evangelical apologist Gleason Archer in his Bible Difficulties asserts that 645 years passed between those two events. Archer's conclusion is that the time interval in mind is between a subsequent confirmation of the promises (to Jacob in Genesis 46.2-4) and the production of the tablets on Sinai. This, however, seems a clever dodge. Paul says clearly that the time between God's making the promises to Abraham and the giving of the law was 430 years. Where did he get such an idea – if a careful examination of the chronology supports a number closer to 645 years? The likely explanation is that that

Paul was reading the Septuagint’s Exodus 12.40: “And the sojourning of the children of Israel, while they sojourned in the land of Egypt and the land of Chanaan, was four hundred and thirty years.”

That Paul relied upon the Septuagint is made strikingly clear from Romans 3.12-18. This entire passage is contained in one psalm in the Septuagint. The following table shows Romans 3.12-18 in the ASV, Brenton’s English translation of Psalm 14.3, and the Greek for both New Testament and Septuagint passages.

Table 9: Romans 3.12-18 in the New Testament and Psalm 14.3 in the Septuagint

The Hebrew for Psalm 14.3 ends with “no, not so much as one,” so Paul cannot have obtained the entire quotation from this Psalm alone if he were reading from the Hebrew. In fact, if Paul were relying upon the Hebrew, he had to string together phrases from six separate locations in this passage: Psalm 14.1-3 (or 53.1-3), 5.9, 140.3, 10.7, Isaiah 59.7-9, and Psalm 36.1. It would be a remarkable coincidence if Paul – using the Hebrew alone – were to collect just these fragments in just the same order as they appear in the Septuagint. (Another explanation is that the Septuagint’s rendering of Psalm 14.3 is a later modification by Christians, a falsification of the original Septuagint reading to bring it into agreement with Romans. However, if that were the case, one wonders why a more exact representation of Romans 3.10 and 11 is not presented in the Septuagint’s Psalm 14.1-2, leading into the quotation in Table 9 above.) Quite plainly, the most plausible explanation is that, in Romans 3.12-18, Paul was quoting Psalm 14.3 from the Septuagint.

The statement in Hebrews 11.5 that before Enoch's translation "he had this testimony, that he pleased God" appears to depend on the Septuagint wording of Genesis 5.22 and 24. In the Masoretic text, Enoch is said not to have pleased, but to have walked with, God.

There are also many allusions in the New Testament to the Septuagint. For instance, in Revelation 1.4, John sends greetings to the seven churches in Asia from "he who is." In English, the reference may not be obvious. But, in the Greek, John uses the phrase ο ων, the exact words God spoke from the burning bush in Exodus 3.14 (Septuagint) after Moses asked His name. As a second example, the author of the book of Hebrews seems to have had Wisdom 7.25-26 in mind when writing Hebrews 1.3.

4.4 Conclusions

The New Testament is a witness to the Church's use of the Septuagint as sacred scripture in its earliest days. This use continued throughout the Church until early in the fourth century, when Jerome undertook a translation from the Hebrew of his day.⁴ We have seen in the section on the Septuagint in the Fathers that Jerome agreed with the proposition that the Church's Old Testament should be the same one quoted in the New Testament. But he held the view - which we have shown above to be manifestly incorrect - that the New Testament authors were faithful to the Hebrew Old Testament.

Is the example of New Testament usage sufficient grounds for a return to the Septuagint as the basis for Old Testament translation? Are there good reasons for translating from the Hebrew Masoretic text, as is the almost universal pattern in the Western world? It might be argued that the Hebrew of the Massorettes is truer to the original than the Septuagint, but this is doubtful given the existence of variant readings in the Hebrew before the second century A.D. The current Hebrew text is indeed the one selected by the rabbis at the end of the first century, which became the standard Hebrew Old Testament thereafter. However, legislation by a body outside the boundaries of the Church can hardly be binding on Her. It could be argued that, even though there were variant readings in the Hebrew at earlier times, we can often be fairly certain that the Hebrew of the Massorettes and the Hebrew the Septuagint was based on are identical. In those cases, we should translate from the Hebrew, and by doing so bring the sense into English with greater exactness. In response, this seems more of an argument for using the Hebrew as a translation aid than as the basis for translation. Such usage would doubtless be laudable. However, this approach should be undertaken with caution. As the meaning of words changes with time, the Septuagint Greek may often provide insight into the meaning of the Hebrew at the time of translation, and so should not be freely replaced with an academic conjecture.

Jerome mentioned with embarrassment certain passages in the Septuagint which he believed to be incorrectly translated from the Hebrew. But before we can convict the Septuagint of translation error, we have to produce, at a minimum, the Hebrew text upon which the Septuagint is based. Since that text no longer exists, accusations of mistranslation remain unproven conjectures. And even if the Septuagint is thick with mistranslation, its errors are frequently sanctioned by the New Testament. For instance, if the word "virgin (parthenos in Greek)" in Isaiah 7.14 is a mistranslation of the Hebrew word almah, Matthew has given his assent to this error. In fact, those of us who believe the New Testament to be inspired by God are required to believe that many “errors” of the Septuagint are inspired also, because they are incorporated into the New Testament directly. If the errors that are quoted have Divine sanction, on what basis can we reject the errors that are not quoted? Or, consider what we imply if we say that the Masoretic text alone can lay claim to being the genuine Old Testament. The clear implication is that the authors of the New Testament were benighted and, ignorant of the truth, used an inferior text. The theological implications they drew when they quoted from “mistranslations” in the Septuagint should be rejected. Thus, the logical corollaries to the proposition that the Masoretic text alone is worthy to be considered the Old Testament include: Christ was not born of a virgin, the angels do not worship the Son, Christ did not come to restore sight to the blind, the behavior of the Jews was not cause for God’s name to be blasphemed among the Gentiles, etc. In short, we are forced to conclude that the New Testament is not inspired.

I have yet to discover any sufficient reason to consider the Masoretic text as preferable to the Septuagint. However, the case in favor of the Septuagint is subject to criticism. Even assuming that the New Testament warrant is sufficient grounds for using a text, one could argue that the New Testament witness is muddled. Although we do find the apostles and their followers using the Septuagint as we know it with great frequency, they also stray toward other sources - sometimes to a text very similar to the Masoretic, sometimes to a text we do not currently possess. Though our failure to recognize the basis for the quotation may often be due to paraphrase, there are cases that are very difficult to explain in this way. Jerome mentioned two of them in a passage quoted in the section on the fathers: “For he shall be called a Nazarene” (Matthew 2. 23) is one example. Another is, “Rivers of living water shall flow out of his belly” (John 7.38).

It is possible that every quotation in the New Testament is from a Septuagint, but from one, though popular in the first century, we no longer possess in its entirety. It is reasonable to conclude from the writings of Irenaeus and Justin Martyr that their scriptures were slightly different from our own. When the New Testament strays from the Masoretic Text, these fathers do too, at least where common quotations can be examined. But there are also portions of scripture quoted in the fathers that are not available in our version of the Greek text. For instance, in his Dialogue with Trypho, Justin claimed that the Jews had deleted the verse, “The Lord remembered His dead people of Israel who lay in the graves; and He descended to preach to them His own salvation.” Irenaeus also quoted the same verse, though he attributed it to Jeremiah on one occasion and to Isaiah on the other. Justin also claimed that the Jews had removed the words “from the wood” from the verse in Psalm 96: “Tell ye among the nations, the Lord hath reigned from the wood.” Neither of these is in the Septuagint we possess today. As a third example, Justin quoted the following, possibly from Ezra or Nehemiah: “And Esdras said to the people, This passover is our Savior and our refuge. And if you have understood, and your heart has taken it in, and we shall humble Him on a standard, and thereafter hope in Him, then this place shall not be forsaken for ever, says the God of hosts. But if you will not believe Him, and will not listen to His declaration, you will be a laughingstock to the nations.”

In short, neither the Greek nor the Hebrew Old Testament in existence today is perfect. The decision to abandon the Septuagint in favor of the Hebrew was made on the mistaken belief that the New Testament quotes exclusively from the Hebrew Old Testament. A more modern argument in favor of the Hebrew might stress the near-perfect preservation of that text through the centuries - a contention proven false by the variant readings discovered in the Dead Sea Scrolls - or it might emphasize the mistranslations in the only other real contender, the Septuagint - which implies the rejection of the authority of the New Testament. The argument in favor of returning to the Septuagint notes the general (though not universal) reliance on it by the New Testament authors and their followers in the early Church. The New Testament can be more fully understood and appreciated, it is argued, if read in conjunction with the Septuagint, because the language of the Greek Old Testament is present throughout the New, both in overt quotations and through allusions. The theology of the Church, as explained by the Fathers of the first several centuries, rests on the wording of the Septuagint. If this theology is true and worthy of defense, then it is critical that the Church be thoroughly familiar with the Bible of Her founders and early defenders.

It seems clear to me that the case in favor of the Septuagint is the stronger of the two. But the same primary argument in favor of translation from the Septuagint - New Testament precedent - implies that the Christian should be aware of Masoretic readings. In like manner, our desire to understand the theology of the early Church in the light of Her scriptures entails the need to retain familiarity with those scriptures - such as the ones quoted by Justin Martyr above - which appear to have dropped out of the Old Testament over the years. In my view, then, the ideal Old Testament will be based on the Septuagint as the primary source, and will include extensive footnotes including significant variant readings from all other sources, including the Masoretic text, the Dead Sea Scrolls, the Samaritan Pentateuch, and the Fathers of the Church.

Appendix A: Agreement in Meaning Between the New Testament Quotations and the Hebrew Old Testament

As in the Septuagint comparison, this analysis relies on the Table of Quotations in New Testament Order (Appendix B). That table contains a column entitled “Meaning” with annotations: “J,” “H,” or “D.” A “J” indicates that the quotation agrees with the Septuagint against the sense of the Masoretic text, an “H” that the quotation supports the Hebrew sense against the Septuagint. The quotation is marked by a “D” when the quotation disagrees in meaning with both the Septuagint and the Hebrew. The following table summarizes the disagreement of the New Testament with the Hebrew Old Testament as a source. For each New Testament book, the number of quotations from each Old Testament book is shown, but the number of times the New Testament reading differs in meaning from the Hebrew Old Testament text - both “J” and “D” readings - is also indicated. Thus, Matthew differs in sense from the Masoretic text 16 times out of 54 quotations. Nine of these disagreements occur when Matthew quotes from Isaiah. Looking along the rows, note that Deuteronomy is quoted against the sense of the Masoretic text 13 times, 2 of these quotations occurring in the book of Romans.

The following two tables summarize these results, providing percentage agreement for each Old Testament and New Testament book. For instance, Zechariah is quoted 7 times, 6 of which are in agreement with the meaning of the Masoretic text. Thus, the New Testament follows the Hebrew version of Zechariah 85.7% of the time. Similarly, Luke follows the Masoretic reading in 21 of 26 passages, for a percentage agreement = 80.1%.

Notes on the Septuagint

Although the agreement between the New Testament and the Septuagint was seen to be lowest in the gospels, the Masoretic text fared even more poorly here. Proceeding as before, we find the following for natural New Testament groupings:

Synoptic gospels	- 76.6
John	- 71.4
Acts	- 75.0
Pauline epistles	- 65.2
Hebrews	- 54.1
Catholic epistles	- 52.9

Luke's quotations agree in meaning with the Masoretic text 77.3% of the time. It appears, then, that agreement with the Masoretic text is best in the gospels, and considerably worse in Paul's writings and the other epistles.

The most remarkable number in the table at the left is the agreement percentage for the book of Isaiah, only 33.6%. Other important books - Psalms and Deuteronomy - also show strong divergence from the Masoretic text. But the New Testament's tendency to disagree with Isaiah is striking.

Appendix B: Table of Quotations in New Testament Order

The table below lists all quotations from the Old Testament which appear in the New. The column labeled "Meaning" contains characters which indicate whether the particular citation agrees in meaning with the Septuagint where that differs from the Masoretic (Hebrew) text - or vice versa. The column labeled "Quality" gives a sense for the agreement in word choice and order between the New Testament and the Septuagint. A key to the symbols is provided immediately below.

Key to the Table below:

* - the New Testament context indicates that this is a quotation.

† - textual variants in the Septuagint are important.

‡ textual variants available in the Dead Sea Scrolls are discussed in the associated detailed summary.

° - textual variants in the New Testament are discussed in the associated detailed summary.

For the "Meaning" column:

U - according to the UBS 4th edition Greek New Testament, these passages agree with the Septuagint against the sense of the Hebrew text.

J - A "J" indicates that it is the author's (Jones) judgment that the New Testament quotation agrees with the Septuagint in meaning, against the sense of the Hebrew text.

H - these passages, in my judgment, agree with the Hebrew against the sense of the Septuagint.

D - disagrees with both the Septuagint and the Hebrew

Annotations relating to "Quality":

P - perfect or near-perfect quotation from the Septuagint - only minor differences, such as word order, articles, inconsequential pronouns, etc.

S - perfect but some words replaced with synonyms (example - Romans 9.17) or with words of related meaning.

O - the New Testament omits portions of the Septuagint text - ellipsis (example - Mark 7.6-7).

L - poetic license employed by the New Testament author: a portion of the Septuagint is replaced or reconstructed (example - Hebrews 10.5-7).

A - the New Testament author augments the Septuagint with additional wording (example - Romans 11.9-10).

F - fragmentary (some words in common - replacements as frequent or more so).

E - few to no words in common (empty set).

The "Weight" column indicates whether the Old Testament source is unique (weight=1), or if multiple Old Testament passages could be the source of the quotation (fractional weights). In some cases, I have determined that one of the Old Testament sources listed by UBS is inferior to the others. In those cases, I have assigned a weight of zero. These weights are used to establish the total number of quotations, the percentage of quotations in agreement with the Septuagint text, etc.

⁵ Note on translations: The New Testament column is from UBS, while the Septuagint is Brenton's text. The LXX English is based on Brenton. The NT and Masoretic (MT) English derive from the 1901 American Standard Version.

⁶ Is 7.14/Mt 1.23: MT disagrees with the NT and the LXX. The Hebrew word here is almah, which means a young woman. The Septuagint reading given above contains a different verb (ληψεται) than the New Testament (εξει). If Codex Alexandrinus is used instead of Codex Vaticanus, the New Testament and the Septuagint agree on this point. The agreement between the New Testament and the Septuagint in this passage is even greater when New Testament variants are considered. Some New Testament witnesses read "you shall call his name," as in the Septuagint: Codex D, a few Greek and some Bohairic manuscripts, Origen and Eusebius.

⁷ Micah 5.2/Mt 2.6: Plainly, a very loose quotation. The LXX and MT are in good agreement. Codex Alexandrinus in Micah 5.2 is slightly closer to the NT, with the reading “shall one come forth a governor.”

⁸ Hos 11.1/Mt 2.15: The NT agrees with the MT. The LXX differs, replacing “my son” with “his children.”

⁹ Jr 31.15/Mt 2.18: The NT and the MT agree. Brenton’s LXX text disagrees. The major conflict between the LXX and the MT is in one verb: The LXX has “would not cease” where the NT gives “would not be comforted.” This disagreement disappears in Codices Alexandrinus and Sinaiticus, which both contain παρακληθηναι in place of παυσασθαι, with the NT. A less serious difference is mitigated by considering New Testament variants. Many New Testament manuscripts replace “ηκουσθη κλαυθμος” with “ηκουσθη θρηνος και κλαυθμος.” Thus, in these manuscripts - for instance, Codices C, D, L, W, 0123; the f13 miniscule family; and the Majority text - Matthew also mentions “lamentation.”

¹⁰ Is 40.3/Mt 3.3: The Hebrew includes the phrase “make level in the desert a highway,” missing from the Greek texts.

¹¹ Dt 8.3/Mt 4.4: Codex Alexandrinus omits the article τω in Dt 8.3, making the agreement between the NT and the LXX exact.

¹² Ps 91.11/Mt 4.6: Codex Sinaiticus in Ps 91.11 includes the conjunction και in “και επι χειρων” with Matthew.

¹³ Dt 6.13/Mt 4.10: Using Codex Alexandrinus, which replaces φοβηθηση (fear) with προσκυνησεις (worship), the LXX aligns with the NT against the MT.

¹⁴ Is 9.1-2/Mt 4.15-16: The NT disagrees with the LXX and the MT. The New Testament substitutes “sat” for both “walking” and “dwell.” Note the similarity between the NT’s “toward the sea” and the MT’s “by the way of the sea.” The text of the Septuagint given above is based on Codex Vaticanus. Codex Alexandrinus, on the other hand, agrees with the NT in replacing “people walking” with “people that sat.”

²⁷ Is 29.13/Mt 15.8-9: The MT does not include the notion of teaching the precepts of men as doctrines. The agreement between the Septuagint and the New Testament improves when LXX textual variations are taken into account. Brenton’s Septuagint is based on the Codex Vaticanus. Codices Sinaiticus and Alexandrinus omit the phrase “with their mouth.” On the other hand, many NT manuscripts (for instance, C, W, 0601, and the Majority) begin the quotation in Matthew’s gospel with εγγιζει μοι ο λαοσ ουτοσ τω στοματι αυτων και - which is nearly identical to the Septuagint.

³³ Zech 13.7/Mt 26.31: The NT and the MT agree. Brenton's LXX, based on Codex Vaticanus, differs significantly in the verb, giving "draw out" instead of "shall be scattered abroad." However, Codex Alexandrinus has διασκορπισθησονται, exactly as the NT. Jerome (Letter LVII) commented on this verse as follows: "In this instance according to my judgment - and I have some careful critics with me - the evangelist is guilty of a fault in presuming to ascribe to God what are the words of the prophet."

Zech 11.12- 13 / Mt 27.9-10 ³⁴	και εστησαν τον μισθον μου triakonta argurus . και ειπε κυριος προς με, καθες αυτους εις το χωνευτηριον, και σκεψομαι ει δοκιμον εστιν, ον τροπον εδοκιμασθην υπερ	και ελαβον τα triakonta arguria , την τιμην του τετιμημενου ον ετιμησαντο απο υιων Ισραηλ, και εδωκαν αυτα εις τον αγρον του κεραμεως, καθα	And they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver . And the Lord said to me, Drop them into the furnace, and I will see if it is good metal, as I was proved for their sakes. And I took the thirty pieces of silver , and cast them into the furnace in	And they took the thirty pieces of silver , the price of him that was priced, whom certain of the children of Israel did price; and they gave them for the potter's field , as the Lord appointed me	So they weighed for my hire thirty pieces of silver. And Yahweh said unto me, Cast it unto the potter, the goodly price that I was prized at by them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them unto the potter, in the house of Yahweh

³⁴ Zech 11.12-Mt 27.9-10: Clearly, a loose quotation. The NT, LXX and the MT agree to an extent - the thirty pieces of silver are mentioned in all three. The MT includes a reference to a “potter,” (absent from the LXX) but no mention of the “potter’s field.” There is fair agreement between the NT and the MT in the phrases “the price of him that was priced” and “the goodly price that I was prized at by them.” It is interesting that Matthew ascribes this quotation to Jeremiah, not Zechariah. It is unlikely that Jeremiah is actually meant, though Jeremiah 18.1-3 and 32.6-15 do refer to a potter and to the purchase of a field in Anathoth. (One miniscule (22) and a marginal reading in Harkel’s Syriac version replace Jeremiah’s name in Matthew 27 with that of Zechariah. A few sources replace Jeremiah with Ιησαιου, while others omit the prophet’s name altogether.)

³⁵ Mal 3.1/Mk 1.2: The NT and the MT agree. The LXX replaces “prepare” with “survey.” Codex Alexandrinus (with others) includes εγω in Malachi, in agreement with the NT. Mark attributes Malachi 3.1 to Isaiah in many NT texts. Isaiah 40.3 immediately follows these lines in Mark’s gospel.

³⁶ Is 40.3/Mk 1.3: The Hebrew includes the phrase “make level in the desert a highway,” missing from the Greek texts.

³⁷ Is 6.9-10/Mk 4.12: The UBS 4th edition Greek New Testament lists Mark 4.12 as a quotation from LXX, indicating differences with the MT. But it is not at all clear how the LXX passage differs materially from the Hebrew.

³⁸ Is 29.13/Mk 7.6-7: The MT does not include the notion of teaching the precepts of men as doctrines. The agreement between the Septuagint and the New Testament improves when LXX textual variations are taken into account. Brenton's Septuagint is based on the Codex Vaticanus. Codices Sinaiticus and Alexandrinus omit the phrase "with their mouth."

⁴⁴ Dt 6.4-5/Mk 12.29-30: The NT replaces the Greek word δυναμεως for strength with ισχυος. In a sense, the NT disagrees with both the MT and the LXX. That is, the NT includes the “mind” from the LXX, absent from the MT, and includes the “heart,” absent from the LXX, but present in the MT. The analysis shifts but reaches a similar conclusion if we consider a textual variant. Brenton’s Septuagint is based primarily on Codex Vaticanus. Codex Alexandrinus gives “heart” where Vaticanus has “mind.” This variation brings the Septuagint into agreement with the MT; but the NT, inserting “with all thy mind,” still differs from both the Hebrew and the Old Testament Greek.

⁴⁹ Is 40.3-5/Lk 3.4-6: The Hebrew omits “all the crooked ways shall become straight, and the rough places plains.” More importantly, the Hebrew omits the “salvation of God” which all mankind shall see. Instead, all flesh shall see “it,” meaning “the glory.” In addition, the Hebrew refers to making a level highway “in the desert,” while the Greek simply refers to a straight path.

⁵⁰ Dt 6.13/Lk 4.8: Using Codex Alexandrinus, which replaces φοβηθηση (fear) with προσκυνησεις (worship), the LXX aligns with the NT against the MT.

⁵¹ Is 61.1-2/Lk 4.18-19: The LXX and the NT include the “recovery of sight to the blind” - a concept which is replaced in MT with an opening of prison for those who are bound. Marginal notes in the RSV and the NIV indicate that this MT phrase could be translated “the opening of the eyes” - in the Hebrew, it is simply “the opening.” The phrase “to heal the broken in heart” - present in the LXX but absent from the UBS NT - can be found in many NT manuscripts. Codex Alexandrinus and the Majority text are prominent examples. The phrase was also quoted by Irenaeus (Against Heresies, Book 4, Chapter 23). The Dead Sea Scrolls 1QIs^a and 1QIs^b both support the Septuagint’s omission of “Yahweh” from “the Spirit of the Lord Yahweh.” The phrase “To set at liberty them that are bruised” in Luke is from Isaiah 58.6, LXX.

⁵² Is 58.6/Lk 4.18: The NT and the LXX agree. The MT has “oppressed” instead of “bruised.”

⁵³ Mal 3.1/Lk 7.27: The NT and the MT agree. The LXX replaces “prepare” with “survey.” Codex Alexandrinus (with others) includes εγω in Malachi, in agreement with the NT.

⁶³ Ex 12.46/Jn 19.36: John changed the tense, person and voice of the verb, to suit his purpose. The English translations of the final pronoun differ, taking advantage of an ambiguity in the Greek: the pronoun αυτου can mean either “of it” or “of him,” depending on the context. In the Old Testament, the reference primarily is to the Passover lamb, an “it.”

⁶⁴ Zech 12.10/Jn 19.37: The NT and the MT agree. Some MT manuscripts have “him” instead of “me.” The LXX differs significantly.

⁶⁵ Joel 2.28-32/Acts 2.17-21: The NT agrees with the LXX with some additions and reordering of material. The MT differs in describing “pillars” of smoke rather than “vapor.” Also, the MT describes the day of the Lord as “terrible” or “dreadful” (NIV), while the Greek word has no such connotation, meaning “coming to light,” “appearing,” “manifest,” “notable,” or “remarkable.” Several LXX manuscripts contain the words γε, μου, ανω, and σημεια, missing from Brenton’s text. Some also omit την (in την ημεραν), included in Brenton.

⁶⁸ Lev 23.29/Acts 3.23: The NT differs from both the LXX and the MT in mentioning a prophet. Since the “prophet” seems to be supplied from Deuteronomy 18.19, Acts 3.23 integrates two verses (Lv 23.29 & Dt 18.19). But the inserted phrase, “shall not hearken to that prophet,” is very similar to Deuteronomy 13.3 (LXX): “you shall not hearken to the words of that prophet” - ουκ ακουσεσθε των λογων του προφητου εκεινου.

Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh

⁷³ Ex 3.2/Acts 7.30. The NT and the LXX agree, though this clearly is not an exact quotation. The NT has “flame of fire” while the LXX has, literally, “fire of flame.” This disagreement can be reconciled in either of two ways. First, examining Old Testament variants: Brenton’s LXX is generally based on Codex Vaticanus. But Codex Alexandrinus has “flame of fire,” in agreement with the NT reading given above. Second, a New Testament variant reading has “flame of fire,” in agreement with Brenton. P47 and Codex Alexandrinus (in the NT), for instance, have πυρι φλογος.

Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Rephan, the images of them which ye made for yourselves. And I will carry you away beyond Damascus	Did ye offer unto me slain beasts and sacrifices Forty years in the wilderness, O house of Israel? And ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, And the star of the god Rephan, The figures which ye made to worship them: And I will carry you away beyond Babylon	Did ye bring unto me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel? Yea, ye have borne the tabernacle of your king and the shrine of your images , the star of your god, which ye made to yourselves. Therefore will I cause you to go into captivity beyond Damascus ⁷⁵ Amos 5.25-27/Acts 7.42-43: The MT differs significantly from the NT and LXX. There is some variation in the order of wording in verse 25 in the Septuagint. Rahlfs gives, “μη σφαγια και θυσιας προσηνεγκατε μοι εν τη ερημω τεσσαρακοντα ετη.” Αυτων, omitted by the NT, is also absent from Codex Alexandrinus.

⁷⁶ Is 66.1-2/Acts 7.49-50: The NT, LXX and the MT agree. It appears that Brenton neglected to translate the question “Did not my hand make all these things?” which is present in the LXX Greek.

⁷⁷ Is 53.7-8/Acts 8.32-33: The New Testament Greek is nearly identical to the LXX, but it does insert several pronouns. MT has a person taken away, not his judgment, and replaces “who shall declare his generation?” with “and as for his generation, who considered ...”

⁷⁸ Ps 89.20/Acts 13.22: The NT, LXX and the MT agree. See 1 Samuel 13.14 for the continuation of this quotation.

⁷⁹ 1 Sam 13.14/Acts 13.22: The NT, LXX and MT agree. "I have found David" is supplied by Psalm 89.20. It may be that "David the son of Jesse" is from Psalm 72.20 and "who shall do my will" is from Isaiah 44.28, in reference to Cyrus. If so, this verse is a conflation from four sources.

⁸⁰ Is 55.3/Acts 13.34: Though the translations differ, the LXX and NT are identical. The RSV translates Is 55.3 as follows: "I will make with you an everlasting covenant, my steadfast, sure love for David." The NIV: "I will make an everlasting covenant with you, my faithful love promised to David." The Hebrew word translated "mercies" in the ASV is chesed, meaning loving kindness.

⁸¹ Ps 16.10/Acts 13.35: According to UBS, the MT disagrees with the NT. The Hebrew word translated "corruption" is shachath, meaning, literally, "a pit." But, when used figuratively, it can mean "corruption." The LXX and the NT agree almost exactly, though Brenton's translation differs from the ASV - using the word "suffer" instead of the more literal "give."

⁸³ Is 49.6/Acts 13.47: The NT and the LXX agree. The MT differs. To be salvation and to be for salvation are different concepts.

⁸⁴ Amos 9.11-12/Acts 15.16-17: The NT seems to quote the Old Testament very loosely here. The MT does not include the idea of earnestly seeking the Lord, as the LXX and the NT do. In addition, the MT has the “remnant of Edom” in place of the “residue of men,” present in the NT and the LXX. Among LXX manuscripts, Codex Alexandrinus includes “αν” and “τον κυριου,” in agreement with the NT. Alexandrinus also replaces “κυριος ο ποιων” with “κυριος ο θεος ο ποιων.” Some Greek NT manuscripts (the Majority text in particular) insert the word παντα after ταυτα.

⁹⁴ Hos 2.23/Rom 9.25: The NT and the LXX agree. Paul reversed the order of the clauses. The MT includes the idea of “mercy” instead of “love.”

⁹⁵ Is 10.22/Rom 9.27-28: The MT replaces “the remnant will be saved” with “a remnant ... shall return.” Brenton has translated λογον as “work” rather than “word.” The LXX manuscript Codex Alexandrinus omits αυτων and includes γαρ, with the NT.

⁹⁶ Is 1.9/Rom 9.29: The MT does not speak of a “seed.”

⁹⁷ Is 8.14/Rom 9.33: The NT and the MT agree. The LXX does not mention the rock “of offence.” The initial and final words from Romans 9.33 are provided by Isaiah 28.16.

⁹⁸ Is 28.16/Rom 9.33: The LXX and the NT agree, but the MT omits the notion of being “put to shame.” In Romans 9.33, “stone of stumbling” is supplied by Isaiah 8.14. The agreement with the Septuagint is stronger if Codices Alexandrinus and Sinaiticus are considered. These both include επ αυτω (on him), omitted from Brenton’s text above.

⁹⁹ Dt 30.12-14/Rom 10.6-8: The NT mentions descent into the abyss, where both the LXX and the MT speak of travel across the sea.

¹¹³ Is 45.23/Rom 14.11: Codex Alexandrinus has εξομολογησεται πασα γλωσσα τω θεω in Is 45.23, differing only in word order from in the NT. The MT differs, having “swear” in place of “confess.”

¹¹⁴ Ps 18.49/Rom 15.9: The NT, LXX and MT agree. Brenton’s English translation of the LXX and the ASV use two different but acceptable English expressions for the Greek word εξομολογησομαι. “Make confession” is within the range of meaning applicable to the Hebrew root yadah, represented in the MT column by “give thanks.” The other difference involves what is sung. The Greek word ψαλω means to pluck strings or to sing accompanied by a harp, and does not necessarily imply praise. However, this is a minor difference, and the context indicates that praise is in view.

¹¹⁵ 2 Sam 22.50/Rom 15.9: The NT, LXX and MT agree. But the Greek word ψαλω means to pluck strings or to sing accompanied by a harp, and does not necessarily imply praise.

¹¹⁶ Ps 117.1/Rom 15.11: The NT, LXX and MT agree. In this psalm, Codex Alexandrinus has επαινεσατωσαν, in agreement with the NT.

¹¹⁷ Is 11.10/Rom 15.12: There is no mention in the MT of the root of Jesse's reign over the Gentiles. Brenton gives "trust" where the ASV translates "hope," but the Greek word is the same.

¹¹⁸ Is 52.15/Rom 15.21: The MT does not mention “him,” the object of the prophecy.

¹¹⁹ Is 29.14/1 Cor 1.19: The major difference between the LXX and the MT is that the Greek states the action in an active way, while the Hebrew is passive: “I will destroy” instead of “shall perish.”

¹²⁰ Is 64.4/1 Cor 2.9: This appears to be a very loose quotation. Yet Paul introduces it with the formula, “as it is written.” Jerome [Letter LVII] used this as an example of paraphrase in the New Testament. In doing so, however, he translated the ending from Hebrew with “what thou hast prepared for them that wait for thee.” The NT ending, τοις αγαπωσιν αυτον, also appears in Sirach 1.10. Both 1 Corinthians and the passage in Sirach deal with God’s gift of wisdom.

¹²¹ Is 40.13/1 Cor 2.16: The MT's emphasis on the Lord's Spirit is decidedly different from the NT and the LXX, where the mind of the Lord is the object of inquiry.

¹²² Job 5.13 / 1 Cor 3.19: The NT and the MT agree. The LXX substitutes "wisdom" for "craftiness." The Hebrew word translated "craftiness" is orem.

¹²³ Dt 17.7/1 Cor 5.13: The Septuagint and the NT differ only in that the NT employs a plural form of the verb, εξαρατε. The MT is concerned with abstract "evil" while the Greek texts address "the evil one."

¹²⁴ Gen 2.24/1 Cor 6.16: The NT and the LXX agree. The MT does not insert the redundant word "two."

I will ransom them from the power of Sheol; I will redeem them from death: O death, where are thy plagues? O Sheol, where is thy destruction? repentance shall be hid from mine eyes

¹²⁶ Is 25.8/1 Cor 15.54: The LXX and the MT both disagree somewhat with the NT. The MT has “the Lord” as the subject, not “death.” The NT has a passive form of the verb for swallow, whereas the LXX is active. The “prevailing” of the LXX is reflected in the “victory” of the NT. Apparently the reading “in victory” is also followed by Theodotion. Lamsa’s translation of Isaiah 25.8 from the Peshitta has “He will swallow up death in victory forever.”

¹²⁷ Hos 13.14/1 Cor 15.55: The Hebrew makes no mention of death’s “sting.” The NIV and the RSV agree with the ASV in translating the Hebrew word qoteb as “destruction.” The Greek word Brenton translates as “penalty” may mean “satisfaction” or “amends.” Thus, the absence of “victory” (the NT reading) is not that far removed from the sense of the LXX, that death has been robbed of what is due to it. In fact, the Greek word for victory here has the possible meaning of damages recovered, as in a lawsuit.

¹²⁸ Ps 116.10/2 Cor 4.13: The MT, rendered literally, is “I built up [aman], for I have arranged [dabar].” The MT translation above uses figurative senses of these Hebrew verbs. Other translations indicate, perhaps more clearly than the ASV, that the Hebrew sense differs from the NT even using the figurative meanings of these verbs. The RSV and NRSV translate Psalm 116.10 as: “I kept my faith, even when I said, ‘I am greatly afflicted.’” The NIV gives this reading: “I believed; therefore I said, ‘I am greatly afflicted.’”

¹²⁹ Is 49.8/2 Cor 6.2: The NT and the LXX agree. The MT varies slightly.

¹³² Dt 21.23/Gal 3.13: The NT and the LXX agree. The MT does not mention “a tree” at this point, though it does earlier in the same verse. Interestingly, Lamsa, in his translation from the Peshitta, provides this: “for he who shall revile God shall be crucified.”

¹³³ Gen 12.7/Gal 3.16: The NT and the LXX agree. The Hebrew word for “seed” is singular, but is almost always used to refer to multiple descendants. Paul’s point in Gal 3.16 depends on the use of the Greek word to indicate a single seed.

¹³⁴ Is 54.1/Gal 4.27: The NT and the LXX agree exactly. The MT differs in a few points.

¹³⁷ Gen 2.24/Eph 5.31: The NT and the LXX agree. The MT does not insert the redundant word “two.”

¹³⁸ Dt 5.16/Eph 6.2-3: The NT follows the LXX word order, reversing the thoughts of long life and well being compared with the MT.

¹³⁹ Num 16.5/2 Tim 2.19: The Masoretic has a slightly different meaning.

¹⁴⁰ Dt 32.43/Heb 1.6: The MT simply omits this phrase from Deuteronomy 32.43. The quotation is similar to the phrase “all gods bow down before him (RSV)” in Psalm 97.7. The Dead Sea Scroll 4QDeut^q contains a clause similar to that present in the LXX: “Rejoice, O heavens, together with him; and bow down to him all you gods, for he will avenge the blood of his sons ...”

They shall perish, but thou shalt endure; Yea , all of them shall wax old like a garment; As a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed: But thou art the same, and thy years shall have no end ¹⁴¹ Ps 102.25-27/Heb 1.10-12: The agreement between the NT and the LXX is nearly exact. The MT replaces the thought of “rolling up” a mantle with that of “changing” it. Two other minor differences between the LXX and the MT are also apparent - work versus works, and the presence of the conjunction “and.” The LXX is supported in both these cases by 11QPs^a, and “works” is the reading in 4QPs^b and some Masoretic manuscripts.

¹⁴² Ps 8.4-6/Heb 2.6-8: The MT differs from the LXX and the NT. The word translated “God” in the MT is elohim. The UBS Greek New Testament omits the phase in brackets. It is present in many NT manuscripts - Alexandrinus and Sinaiticus among them - but absent from the papyrus P⁴⁶, Vaticanus, and the Majority text.

¹⁴³ Ps 22.22/Heb 2.12: The NT and the LXX agree. The MT does not include the notion of singing praise.

¹⁴⁴ Is 8.17/Heb 2.13: The NT and the LXX agree. The MT replaces “trust in” with “look for.”

¹⁴⁵ Ps 95.7-11/Heb 3.7-11: The MT includes the place name from Exodus 17.7 where “contention = Meribah” occurred. The LXX and the NT employ “provocation” instead. There is also a real difference between the LXX and the NT’s “if ye shall hear his voice” and “oh that ye would hear his voice” from the Hebrew. The latter construction would come into Greek through a verb in the optative mood. But the verb ακουσητε is subjunctive. Variants in the LXX bring the NT and the LXX a bit closer. Some LXX manuscripts omit με from the thirteenth line. Sinaiticus and Alexandrinus replace και αυτοι with αυτοι δε, also in agreement with the NT. New Testament variants also reduce the differences between the NT and the LXX. The Majority text and correctors of some of the major uncials replace εν δοκιμασια with εδοκιμασαν με, which is the reading in the Textus Receptus as well. Several NT manuscripts (including the Majority text) replace ταυτα with εκεινη, in agreement with the LXX.

The latter construction would come into Greek through a verb in the optative mood. But the verb ακουσητε is subjunctive.

¹⁴⁸ Jr 31.31-34/Heb 8.8-12: The NT and the LXX agree with only minor variations. The MT departs significantly in two places. Codices Sinaiticus and Alexandrinus have λεγει κυριος in Jeremiah place of φησι κυριος (line 2). These also omit μου in διαθηκη μου (line 18). Codex Alexandrinus uses επιγραψω, with the NT (line 26), but orders the surrounding words differently.

¹⁴⁹ Ps 40.6-8/Heb 10.5-7: The NT author modified the LXX only slightly in this quotation, but the MT omits the thought of the Incarnation entirely, replacing “but a body hast thou prepared for me” with “mine ears hast thou opened.”

¹⁵⁰ Jr 31.33-34/Heb 10.16-17: The NT and the LXX agree with only minor variations (e.g., the reversal of “heart” and “mind”), though this is a much looser quotation than in Hebrews 8.8. The MT departs significantly in one place.

¹⁵¹ Dt 32.35-56/Heb 10.30: The quotation appears to follow the MT more closely in the first clause, and the LXX in the second. See also Romans 12.19.

¹⁵² Hab 2.3-4/Heb 10.37-38: The two Greek texts display only minor differences. But the MT replaces “if he shrink draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him” with “his soul is puffed up, it is not right in him.”

¹⁵⁵ Pr 3.11-12/Heb 12.5-6: The MT ending here is decidedly different from the NT or LXX. Codex Vaticanus is the only major LXX manuscript containing ελεγγει. The others have παιδευει, with the NT.

¹⁵⁶ Ex 19.12, 13/Heb 12.20: The NT, LXX and MT agree. Clearly, a loose quotation. Textus Receptus (and so the Authorized Version) adds η βολιδι κατατοξευθησεται (or thrust through with a dart) immediately after “it shall be stoned” - in agreement with the Septuagint.

¹⁵⁷ Hag 2.6/Heb 12.26: The NT differs from the MT in omitting the phrase “in a little while.”

¹⁶⁰ Is 40.6-8/1 Pt 1.24-25: The NT and the LXX agree with minor variations. The MT mentions “goodliness” instead of “glory.” In addition, the NT omits the additional sentence provided in the MT. Many NT manuscripts bring the LXX and the NT even closer, omitting ως in line 1 and replacing αυτης with ανθρωπου in the second line.

¹⁶¹ Is 28.16/1 Pet 2.6: The LXX and the NT agree, but the MT omits the notion of being “put to shame.” The agreement with the Septuagint is stronger if Codices Alexandrinus and Sinaiticus are considered. These both include επ αυτω (on him), omitted from Brenton’s text above.

¹⁶² Is 8.14/1 Pt 2.8: The NT and the MT agree. The LXX does not mention the rock “of offence.”

¹⁶³ Is 43.20/1 Pt 2.9a: “Chosen” and “elect” reflect the same Greek word. The MT carries the same meaning. UBS may consider this a discrepancy between the NT and the MT because of word order. Apparently, the MT has “my chosen people,” while 1QIsa^a provides “my people, my chosen.” The latter order reflects the Greek. (This explanation seems very unlikely.)

¹⁶⁴ Ex 19.6/1 Pet 2.9: The MT has “kingdom of priests” in place of “a royal priesthood.”

¹⁶⁵ Is 43.21/1 Pt 2.9c: On first glance, the Septuagint and the New Testament appear to disagree. But the Greek words περιποιησαμην and περιποιησiv are clearly related. Περιποιησαμην is a first person singular aorist indicative verb in the middle voice, and could be translated, “I have preserved, kept safe, or procured for myself.” Περιποιησiv is the accusative singular form of περιποιησiv, a keeping safe or an acquiring. Brenton has chosen the idea of preservation, while the ASV translators stressed acquisition. The MT involves the notion of formation, which is absent from the NT.

The eyes of Yahweh are toward the righteous, And his ears are open unto their cry. The face of Yahweh is against them that do evil ¹⁶⁶ Is 53.9/1 Pt 2.22: The NT and the LXX agree, though the NT author has replaced the LXX's "lawlessness" with the synonymous concept, "sin." The MT employs "violence" instead. Since this is in Isaiah's description of the suffering servant, ascribing sinlessness to him is significant theologically. The fact that the Septuagint translates the passage in this way indicates that, in the translators' time, the suffering servant was not always identified with the nation of Israel, which all would agree was not sinless. Codex Alexandrinus in Is 53.9 reads ευρεθη δολος, with the NT.

Appendix D – Dead Sea Scroll/Septuagint Alignments Against the Masoretic Text

The following tables show Septuagint readings which differ from the Masoretic text, but which are supported by the Dead Sea Scrolls. Underlining is used to highlight the differences so supported. The “Septuagint” column largely reflects Brenton's translation, and the “Masoretic Text” is based on the American Standard Version. The first table is limited to the first five books of the Bible, but similar variations prevail elsewhere (see the second table for a sampling).

- I have made clarifications where those translations do not sufficiently delineate differences in the source texts. For instance, Brenton translated the Greek word συναγωγήν in Gen 1.9 with “place,” which I have replaced with the more exact “gathering.”
- Note also that for extended passages such as Gen 1.9 and Ex 22.5, the Dead Sea Scroll evidence in favor of the Septuagint reading is often fragmentary. That is, if the entire scroll were still extant, it would definitely contain additional material, not present in the Masoretic text. But the material that has been recovered agrees with the Septuagint.

Although the Dead Sea Scrolls often support Septuagint readings, they also frequently oppose them. Thus, the alignments listed below are evidence for the antiquity of Hebrew source text of the Septuagint and for the diversity of the Hebrew Old Testament in ancient times. But they do not, in themselves, argue that the Hebrew source the Septuagint is based upon is preferable to the Masoretic text.

The list of passages given below was generated using the footnotes in The Dead Sea Scrolls Bible, Abegg, Flint, and Ullrich, HarperCollins, 1999.

Notes on the table.

1) The book of Ezra was formerly entitled 1 Esdras in Roman Catholic Bibles. 1 Esdras in this table is not Ezra. It is a variant account of material from 2 Chronicles, Ezra and Nehemiah, canonical for the Orthodox but not for Roman Catholics or Protestants.

2) There appears to be considerable confusion about 2 Esdras, with many authorities identifying it as a part of the “Septuagint Plus,” works that are in the Septuagint but not in the Hebrew Old Testament. The Septuagint book of 2 Esdras, however, is quite plainly in the Hebrew canon, being comprised of Ezra and Nehemiah. It begins with the words, “And in the first year of Cyrus the king of Persia” and ends with “Remember me, O our God, for good.” The Apocryphal book of 2 Esdras, so titled in the King James Version Apocrypha and in the “Apocryphal/Deuterocanonical” sections of the Revised Standard Version and the New Revised Standard Version, does not appear in the Septuagint at all. This other 2 Esdras (3 Esdras in the Slavonic Bible and 4 Esdras in an appendix to the Vulgate) is an apocalyptic work. Among other things, it describes how Ezra miraculously restored the Old Testament, which had been burned (14.19-26, 37-48), and how God stopped the Euphrates River from flowing to allow the lost tribes of Israel to pass into a far country (13.43-45).

3) 4 Maccabees is included as an appendix in Bibles of the Orthodox Church.

4) Psalm 151 is canonical for the Orthodox but not for Roman Catholics or Protestants. Brenton’s translation of Psalm 151:

This Psalm is a genuine one of David, though supernumerary, composed when he fought in single combat with Goliath.

1. I was small among my brethren, and youngest in my father’s house: I tended my father’s sheep.
2. My hands formed a musical instrument, and my fingers tuned a psaltery.
3. And who shall tell my Lord? the Lord himself, he himself hears.
4. He sent forth his angel, and took me from my father’s sheep, and he anointed me with the oil of his anointing.
5. My brothers were handsome and tall; but the Lord did not take pleasure in them.
6. I went forth to meet the Philistine; and he cursed me by his idols.
7. But I drew his own sword, and beheaded him, and removed reproach from the children of Israel.

5) The book of Odes contains the Prayer of Manasseh, which is canonical for the Orthodox but not for Roman Catholics or Protestants.

6) The Septuagint books of Esther and Daniel contain several sections not present in the Masoretic Hebrew text. In Daniel, these are entitled Susanna, the Prayer of Azarias and the Song of the Three Children, and Bel and the Dragon. Apparently, the Greek text of Daniel that appears in Septuagint manuscripts is actually Theodotion’s translation. According to Swete (Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek, page 47, footnote 1) only one copy of the original Septuagint version of Daniel is extant -- in “the Chigi M.S., known as Cod. 87.”

Summary note on variations in the canon.

Books and fragments that are canonical for Roman Catholics and Orthodox but not for Protestants:

Judith, Tobit, 1 and 2 Maccabees, Wisdom, Sirach (also known as Ecclesiasticus), Baruch, the Epistle of Jeremiah, and the additions to Esther and Daniel.

Books and fragments that are canonical for the Orthodox but not for Roman Catholics:

1 Esdras, 3 Maccabees, Psalm 151, and the Prayer of Manasseh. In addition, the apocalyptic 2 Esdras (perhaps more happily termed 3 Esdras -- see Note 2 above) is included in Slavonic Bibles.

Appendix F – A Collection of References to the “Septuagint Plus” in the New Testament

The references in the table below were culled from Nestle-Aland’s Greek-English New Testament, Appendix IV, and from marginal notes in Thomas Nelson’s reprint of the 1611 Authorized Version and Lazarus Ministry Press’ facsimile edition of the 1560 Geneva Bible.

Sirach 7.14 Use not many words in a multitude of elders, and make not much babbling when thou prayest.	Matthew 6.7 But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking.	The 1611 Authorized Version associates Sirach 7.14 with Matthew 6.5, 7 in a marginal note. Both passages forbid babbling or vain repetitions.
Sirach 28.2 Forgive thy neighbour the hurt that he hath done unto thee, so shall thy sins also be forgiven when thou prayest.	Matthew 6.12 And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.	Both passages tie God’s forgiveness to our forgiveness of the sins of others.
Sirach 29.10-12 10 Lose thy money for thy brother and thy friend, and let it not rust under a stone to be lost. 11 Lay up thy treasure according to the commandments of the most High, and it shall bring thee more profit than gold. 12 Shut up alms in thy storehouses: and it shall deliver thee from all affliction.	Matthew 6.20 But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal:	The 1611 Authorized Version associates Sirach 29.11 with Matthew 6.20, Luke 11.41 and 12.33, Acts 10.4, and 1 Timothy 6.18, 19 in a marginal note.
Tobit 4.15 Do that to no man which thou hatest	Matthew 7.12 Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets. Luke 6.31 And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye	See also Sirach 31.15. The 1560 Geneva Bible, the Bible of the Marian exiles, and the 1611 Authorized Version associate Tobit 4.15 with these New Testament passages in marginal references. Tobit provides half the New Testament injunction, saying only what one should not do. The principle is the same: to test our

Sirach simply wishes to point out the fruitlessness of the wicked.
Sirach 48.10 Who wast ordained for reproofs in their times, to pacify the wrath of the Lord's judgment, before it brake forth into fury, and to turn the heart of the father unto the son, and to restore the tribes of Jacob.	Matthew 17.11 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things.	Both passages are plainly about Elijah. The notion of restoration is common to both as well, and to Malachi 3.23 (LXX): "who shall restore the heart of the father to the son, and the heart of a man to his neighbour, lest I come and smite the earth utterly." It is difficult to know whether the passage from Sirach or the one from Malachi was foremost in Jesus's mind here.
Sirach 7.32-35 32 And stretch thine hand unto the poor, that thy blessing may be perfected. 33 A gift hath grace in the sight of every man living; and for the dead detain it not. 34 Fail not to be with them that weep, and mourn with them that mourn. 35 Be not slow to visit the sick: for that shall make thee to be beloved.	Matthew 25.36 Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me.	The 1560 Geneva Bible associates Sirach 7.35 with Matthew 25.36 in a marginal reference. Both passages encourage visitations to the sick.
Sirach 37.2 Is it not a grief unto death, when a companion and friend is turned to an enemy?	Matthew 26.38 Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me. Mark 14.34 And saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death:	The passage in Sirach treats of false friends. In the quotations from Matthew and Mark, Jesus is about to be betrayed by one of his friends. Both Sirach and the Gospels associate this sorrow of betrayal with death.

Wisdom 2.18 For if the just man be the son of God, he will help him, and deliver him from the hand of his enemies.	Matthew 27.43 He trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him: for he said, I am the Son of God.	In marginal references, the 1560 Geneva Bible and the 1611 Authorized Version associate Wisdom 2.18 with Matthew 27.43. In both instances, evil men test the relationship between a righteous one and God.
Judith 13.18 Then said Ozias unto her, O daughter, blessed art thou of the most high God above all the women upon the earth; and blessed be the Lord God, which hath created the heavens and the earth, which hath directed thee to the cutting off of the head of the chief of our enemies.	Luke 1.42 And she spake out with a loud voice, and said, Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb.	Judith was called blessed in this passage because she beheaded Holofernes, who symbolized the devil. Similarly, in Judges 5.24, Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite was termed blessed above women after she had killed Sisera, the commander of the Canaanite army, by driving a peg through his temple. Gabriel may have had these women in mind when he referred to Mary in this way, because she was to bring forth the Christ, who would “destroy him that had the power of death, even the devil” (Hebrews 2.4).
Sirach 10.14 The Lord hath cast down the thrones of proud princes, and set up the meek in their stead.	Luke 1.52 He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree.	The parallelism between these passages is apparent.
Sirach 11.19 Whereas he saith, I have found rest, and now will eat continually of my goods; and yet he knoweth not what time shall come upon him, and that he must leave those things to others, and die.	Luke 12.19 And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.	In marginal references, the 1560 Geneva Bible and the 1611 Authorized Version associate Sirach 11.19 with Luke 12.19. The verse from Sirach quotes a rich man (Sirach 11.18). The man in Jesus’s parable is also rich.
Tobit 2.2 And when I saw abundance of meat, I said to my son, Go and bring what poor man soever thou shalt find out of our brethren, who is mindful of the Lord; and, lo,	Luke 14.13 But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind	Tobit provided an example of the behavior Jesus enjoined.

I tarry for thee.
Wisdom 9.1 O God of my fathers, and Lord of mercy, who hast made all things with thy word	John 1.3 All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made.	The Logos is responsible for creating all things.
Sirach 16.21 It is a tempest which no man can see: for the most part of his works are hid.	John 3.8 The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.	In the passage from Sirach, God's workings are compared to an invisible tempest. The figure of the invisible wind is also used by Jesus to describe the workings of the Holy Spirit.
Wisdom 2.16 We are esteemed of him as counterfeits: he abstaineth from our ways as from filthiness: he pronounceth the end of the just to be blessed, and maketh his boast that God is his father .	John 5.18 Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the sabbath, but said also that God was his Father , making himself equal with God.	Wisdom 2.12-20 is the speech of wicked men who list their grievances against "the righteous man" whom they plan to "condemn to a shameful death." The parallel to the Jewish leaders and Christ is clear.
Sirach 24.21 They that eat me shall yet be hungry, and they that drink me shall yet be thirsty.	John 6.35 And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.	John 6.35 appears to be an allusion by contrast.
Wisdom 2.14 He was made to reprove our thoughts.	John 7.7 The world cannot hate you; but me it hateth, because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil. Ephesians 5.13 But all things that are reprov'd are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light.	In marginal references, the 1560 Geneva Bible and the 1611 Authorized Version associate Wisdom 2.14 with these New Testament passages. The righteous man described in Wisdom is an affront to the wicked. His mere presence makes them feel guilty. So also the Son of God shines as light into the darkness and makes the wicked deeds of men manifest.

Sirach 28.7 Remember the commandments, and bear no malice to thy neighbour: remember the covenant of the Highest, and wink at ignorance.	Acts 17.30 And the times of this ignorance God winked at ; but now commandeth all men every where to repent:	The verses speak of winking at ignorance. It may be that Paul picked up the expression from Sirach. In the Greek, the resemblance is less obvious than in English, but is still unmistakable.
Sirach 4.31 Let not thine hand be stretched out to receive, and shut when thou shouldest repay.	Acts 20.35 I have shewed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.	The 1560 Geneva Bible associates Sirach 4.31 with Acts 20.35 in a marginal reference. Both passages stress giving over receiving.
Wisdom 13.1 Surely vain are all men by nature, who are ignorant of God, and could not out of the good things that are seen know him that is: neither by considering the works did they acknowledge the workmaster	Romans 1.19 Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath shewed it unto them.	The 1560 Geneva Bible associates Wisdom 13.1 with Romans 1.19 in a marginal reference. Both passages emphasize that creation itself provides sufficient reason for belief in God.
Wisdom 12.24 For they went astray very far in the ways of error, and held them for gods, which even among the beasts of their enemies were despised, being deceived, as children of no understanding.	Romans 1.23 And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things.	In marginal references, the 1560 Geneva Bible and the 1611 Authorized Version associate Wisdom 12.24 with Romans 1.23.
Wisdom 11.23 But thou hast mercy upon all; for thou canst do all things, and winkest at the sins of men, because they should amend.	Romans 2.4 Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness and forbearance and longsuffering; not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth	God delays punishment to allow men time to repent.

Sirach 44.21 Therefore he assured him by an oath, that he would bless the nations in his seed, and that he would multiply him as the dust of the earth, and exalt his seed as the stars, and cause them to inherit from sea to sea, and from the river unto the utmost part of the earth.	Romans 4.13 For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith.	In marginal references, the 1560 Geneva Bible and the 1611 Authorized Version associate Sirach 44.21 with Galatians 3.8. Gal 3.8: “And the Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed.” Sirach 44.21 may be the source for Paul’s view that Abraham was “heir of the world.”
Wisdom 15.7 For the potter, tempering soft earth, fashioneth every vessel with much labour for our service: yea, of the same clay he maketh both the vessels that serve for clean uses, and likewise also all such as serve to the contrary: but what is the use of either sort, the potter himself is the judge.	Romans 9.21 Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour?	The 1560 Geneva Bible associates Wisdom 15.7 with Romans 9.20 in a marginal reference, but 9.21 is probably meant. The 1611 Authorized Version associates Wisdom 15.7 with Romans 9.11: “(For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth;)”.
Sirach 7.34 34 Fail not to be with them that weep, and mourn with them that mourn.	Romans 12.15 Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep.	The 1560 Geneva Bible associates Sirach 7.34 with Romans 12.15 in a marginal reference.
Wisdom 6.18 And love is the keeping of her laws; and the giving heed unto her laws is the assurance of incorruption;	Romans 13.10 Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law.	Both passages equate love with obedience.

Sirach 1.10 She is with all flesh according to his gift, and he hath given her to them that love him	1 Corinthians 2.9 But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.	Sirach is discussing how God gives Wisdom as a gift to those who love him. Paul's point in 1 Corinthians is that he imparts "secret and hidden wisdom of God" to the mature. Paul's use of the phrase "it is written" signals a direct quotation, but the source is not clear in this case. The ending seems to rely on Sirach 1.10.
Wisdom 3.8 They shall judge the nations, and have dominion over the people, and their Lord shall reign for ever.	1 Corinthians 6.2 Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?	In marginal references, the 1560 Geneva Bible and the 1611 Authorized Version associate Wisdom 3.8 with 1 Corinthians 6.2 and Matthew 19.28. In both passages, the saints judge the nations. The passage from Wisdom is a more appropriate reference than Daniel 7.22, where justice is given to the saints.
Sirach 37.28 For all things are not profitable for all men, neither hath every soul pleasure in every thing.	1 Corinthians 6.12 All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any. 1 Corinthians 10.23 All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not.	The Greek is closer than the English here (expedient = profitable = συμφερεῖ). Sirach warns against doing things that are bad for you, which is Paul's point as well, although, in contrast to Sirach, he is concerned with repercussions more serious than those associated with overeating.
2 Maccabees 12.43-45 43 And when he had made a gathering throughout the company to the sum of two thousand drachms of silver, he sent it to Jerusalem to offer a sin offering, doing therein very well and honestly, in that he was mindful of the resurrection: 44 For if he had not hoped that they that were slain should have risen again, it had been superfluous and	1 Corinthians 15.29 Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?	Since baptism is an act whereby men are reconciled to God (see Acts 2.37-38, Galatians 3.27, 1 Peter 3.21), it is plausible that those who were baptized for the dead sought to make reconciliation for them, as Judas Maccabeus did for his fallen, idolatrous comrades.

The passage in 2 Maccabees states that in that future period when the people are gathered into God's mercy, the ark will be revealed.
